We shall not cease from exploration
And the end of all our exploring
Will be to arrive where we started
And know the place for the first time.

— T.S. Eliot
In the beginning, we entered East’s somewhat ominous looking double doors excited and nervous, unsure of how to begin this new phase of our lives. But we still remained uncertain as we wandered the halls of a strange and unfamiliar place.
It was more than just a new locale, however, that brought out our insecurities. Beginning four new years of limitless exploration seemed a little frightening at first, but it was this, the unpredictable, the unknown future which would provide an invitation to a new freedom.
to the world around us. The freedom to explore offered a chance to sample different perspectives, and filter through these to establish that one perspective we would come to adopt as our own. We saw everything from a new point of view, with a maturity, depth, and enthusiasm that we never had before. We used this new perspective in every decision we made. The more we understood how to perceive the world the more we understood how to perceive ourselves.
Some of us cautiously stepped into this new territory of activities, friends, and classes. Others delved straight in, letting the excitement of the fresh and the new lead them. No matter how we began that first year, a universal link connected us all. Things, at times, were painfully difficult. We experienced new levels of stress and insecurity. But we never gave up, and we survived. We were, after all, the makers of our school.
It was a time of indecision, a time of ambiguity; who our friends were, what clubs we wanted to join, who we were and who we wanted to become. It was a time of experimentation, when we could make mistakes and still lean on others when we fell. Everyday we would run into hundreds of familiar and unfamiliar faces. We struggled to find our identity among the crowd in a school of 1800 students. We wanted to stand out and become an individual.
Old friends changed. Strangers came into our lives, and we welcomed them with a new warmth, because we too were changing. By the end of freshman year, we realized the distance we had traveled, and marveled at the events that had taken place in our lives. It was a victory, even though ambiguity still remained with us. We had entered, even floundered for a little while, but we emerged intact, ready to experience the years ahead with the handful of valuable knowledge that we had amassed.
The beginning of the school year also means the beginning of other things, such as new friendships, new clubs, and new activities. Seniors are planning for college, while the freshmen are starting a new school. It is an exciting time for all students. People are excited to try out new things and meet others. "The beginning of the year is the best part because everything seems as if it has been wiped clean and ready for a fresh start," said Olivia Wu ('02).

Activities and clubs are ways to bring people together in a new year. For many, being involved simply means renewed chances to meet old friends and make new ones— all the while spending time doing what interests them. Jeremy Volkman ('01), a member of Marching Band, said, "Activities bring me and my friends closer together—since we all practiced several hours each afternoon, we have time to not only learn the music but also have fun doing it."

The sense of starting anew holds a special meaning this fall as students eagerly anticipate the new millennium. With change comes uncertainty, but for the majority of East's students, change is refreshing. Annette Gabay ('02) said that she is looking forward to it. "What better time than now to help others make a happier beginning?" Gabay said. "Y2K or not, one thing is clear: excitement, not fear, rules East."

The refreshing scent of newly mowed grass is in the air as the girls' Powder Puff football game sets off to a lively start. Autumn, in all its luminous colors heralds the beginning of this annual East tradition—and every year, the start of the game signals a fresh year.

Even at the beginning of the year, Joyce Morehead ('02) works diligently in class. After their refreshing summer break, students are ready to focus on their classes and start working harder than before.

As the students clamber off the bus, they prepare themselves for a new day at school. For many students, the bus is a handy way to beat the morning rush.

Mr. Terranova and Reggie Antron ('02) joke around in the hallways, renewing a friendship formed the year before. Students and teachers are given a chance to get to know each other better as each new school year begins.
Paint bottles opened, crisp rolls of construction paper unfurled... All the telltale signs of an East after school activity. Here, the clubs are anything but typical; organizations such as the Craft Club and Art Club prove that students with unique ideas are always on the lookout to begin their own original after school activity.

Students wait impatiently in the cafeteria for the 7:45 bell to ring. The bell is the sound that catches the students’ attention, signaling that school is about to begin.

With wonder and awe, Laurie Goldberg ('01) searches on the guidance office bulletin board for information on summer programs and talent scholarships. Students like Goldberg rely on the guidance office to continually inform about new opportunities offered at East.

Sheri Levin ('00) discusses potential scholarship opportunities in her college search. For Levin, applying to colleges is a new experience that is as stressful as it is rewarding — something that ushers in the beginning of her senior year.
Every forty-two minutes, the hallways at East become filled with hurried, rushing students impatient to go to their next class, elective or lunch. Amidst the blur of activity, nothing stands still. Even though there are five minutes between each class, students always walk faster and race harder. A myriad of people all rush to a different destination.

Amy Scura ('01) grabs a quick bite of her lunch in her Introduction to Photography class. Like other students, Scura often spends brief, hectic moments trying to catch up on things that time has left behind.

Simon Wilson ('03) jams in a hackey-sack session during his lunch period. Wilson is not unusual—like many other East students, he tries to do as many things as he can—and that means doing more and more things at school that he did not have time to do at home.

Time is truly a precious commodity when one has a full workload of school, social life, and activities. When the going gets tough, sometimes that means cramming in extra study time between class, during lunch, or even during an elective. Roshni Toorkey ('02) said, “Because teachers give you so much homework, you can never finish it in one night.”

Narcolepsy it is not. Jeff Wang ('00) goes for a quick nap in the middle of class—an action that disregards all the rules except for one: the necessity of sleep. Forget caffeine—the biological clock will win, sooner or later, against the twenty-four hour clock.
Frantic students armed with caffeine surround themselves with books, notebooks, index cards, and Cliff Notes. Their united mission: to try to remember the details of the chapter they were supposed to finish studying last night. Others, comatose, sleepwalk through the halls and climb into class just in time to hand in that paper they had worked on until the wee hours of the morning. Whether bogged down by procrastination, overload, or both, East students suffer from a severe case of time (and sleep) deprivation.

For some, the sheer number of extracurricular activities combined with part-time jobs leaves them little time to get it all done. Thus, most students sacrifice sleep in order to finish important assignments. Genevieve LaFerriere (‘00) said, "I usually skimp on sleep when things get really hectic - but eventually everything works out - sooner or later." David Firestein (‘01), another overworked student, said that some of his homework just does not get done.

Sometimes, even the simplest tasks of a student’s daily routine are delayed. The culprit? Many blame the twenty-four hour day. To make up for lost time, Lauren Heft (‘01) helps Britney Scharf (‘01) out with the simple things that get students through hectic school days.

Sitting in biology, Minh Ly (‘00) cannot help but yawn. Widely due to his lack of sleep. The relatively large workload of the course certainly does not help alleviate this problem. "Good grades, sleep. Pick one," said Ly. "When you go to bed at 4 or 5 in the morning, you’ve got to make up for it somewhere."

Chris Hartung (‘01) takes time out of the day to make a quick phone call. Students find it important to keep up with their outside lives, and many realize that school is not the only part of an ordinary school day. Hartung tries to make everything in his day progress smoothly.
Friends Forever

Friendship. What does the word mean? In a short dictionary definition, it means an attachment or a comradeship. To East's students, friendship definitely means a lot more. Laura Hanum ('01) said, "You have to trust the person. It's like give and take. You trust them and they trust you." Besides trust, another meaning of friendship is honesty. Melissa Chung ('01) said, "The most important this is honesty. I have to be able to tell the person anything." Qualities like these make long lasting friendships. To most students at East, friends are one of the most significant part of their lives. Emily Joo ('01) said, "Sharing is the most important thing. Another important quality is keeping touch with a friend even though he/she is far away." Not only are friends there for you when you are in need, but they share everything with you, from their lunch to a secret. Friends can shape a person's characteristics and personalities. Choosing the right friends to hang out with is one of the most consequential decisions in life, and that is what the students at East strive to do.

Abbey Racelis ('01) and Matt Silverberg ('00) have a lively conversation during lunch. For many students, those precious forty-two minutes spent in the cafeteria among their friends provide a much-needed break from number-two pencils and textbooks.

At the end of yet another busy day, Tiffany Gabbay ('01) crams her friends into her car as part of the carpooling routine. Not just a practical transportation solution, carpooling shows the generosity that students who are lucky enough to drive to school bestow upon their friends.

More than just a passing trend, friendship bracelets represent the close relationship that students develop during high school — and beyond. Whether they be woven or beaded, the multicolored bracelets symbolize the diverse friendships that students make during their four years.

Working together in the photography room, Kevin Skobac ('00) and Abby Lichtman ('01) have fun while doing something both share a mutual interest in. The electives available often become a fun diversion from the daily doldrums of class — especially when one is among friends.

Sometimes, taking the time out in the midst of a hectic day can make all the difference. Yolanda Wan ('00) and Jen Yang ('00) take a moment to catch up on things while taking a short break from their busy schedules. Sharing a smile in a friend's company often makes up for the whirlwind stress of work and life.

With her friends listening attentively, Sarah Moore ('03) shares a joke during lunch. The stories that friends share in the cafeteria give students a chance to just have fun and enjoy a period free from the obligations of homework.
Taking advantage of every free moment in between classes is sometimes the only way to keep in touch with friends. Nicole Whittier ('02) and Corrine Tyrus ('02) chat while accompanying each other to class — proving that time management extends beyond merely the classroom.

Before school begins, Dave Gadren ('00) takes a quick nap on the arm of Kristin Lichtman ('02). Being able to lean on a reliable friend makes up an integral part of high school life, making the transition to adulthood all the more meaningful.

Taking in a tennis match is twice as fun when one watches it with a friend. Chris Williams ('00) and Marcus Bullock ('00) share a companionable silence, showing that even quietude can be worthwhile.

As they wait for their rides after school, Melissa Medoway ('02) and Christa Wesley ('02) discuss what happened during their day. Simply exchanging thoughts with a friend can sometimes ease the strain of a hectic day.

Ayren Kessler ('02) explains a complicated problem to Allison Horowitz ('02). Though most teachers offer extra help sessions, many times a friend can aid just as well. In addition to helping the person in need, the “tutors” also reinforce their own knowledge of the subject.
“Spirit Week is a time when students from each grade can join together to express their school and class pride. It is a fun-filled week of entertaining competitions, ending with a dance and the Homecoming Game.”
- Judy Wu ('00)

Nick Chan ('00) shakes his bonbon during the senior dance group's Ricky Martin tribute at the Spirit Week dance. Students like Chan are more than willing to participate in these competitions to help the cause of their respective classes. Enthusiasm is contagious and spreads very quickly.
Rah Rah, East!

In November, Cafeteria 1 changes from merely a lunchroom into an arena for students to showcase their milk drinking and other talents for the sake of class pride. In the milk drinking contest, students cluster around, cheering loudly as their fellow classmates gulp down milk from bottles as quickly as possible. When the winner finishes, spontaneous shouts rise from the class that has won the most points for the game of the day. The other three classes vow revenge in crab soccer and tug of war, but for now, one class stands victorious. The annual competitions during Spirit Week inspire the competitive spirit that binds members of each class together. Camaraderie emerges during dance practices, booth construction, and float building; the late hours unite students in the quest to do their best work.

Senior class Vice President Lauren Marlowe says, “I’ve always thought that Spirit Week is a great time for students to take their minds off work and concentrate on the other aspect of high school. It allows them to relax and bond with other members of their class.” Spirit Week does just that. It inspires all students to get involved, whether through “Name that Tune” trivia in homeroom or the ruthless Penny Wars in the cafeteria. Long after the last quarter of the Homecoming football game draws to a close, Spirit Week remains in the memories of all students.

The frenzy that occurs when students from each grade play musical chairs during lunch demonstrates the eagerness that come from a little friendly competition. Activities such as this one during Spirit Week give the students a kick-start to a weekend stretch of energetic fun.

Proud students show off their moves in the Spirit Week Dance, proving that the mixture of class spirit, friends and foes make for a memorable evening. Every year, the dance closes with a bang to the week’s festivities.

Seniors celebrate their finished float with Ricky Martin during the Homecoming Game. Though the students sacrificed much of their time and effort in the float building process, the outcome was well worth it. “Float-building is a great example of hard work and enjoyment combined into one activity,” said Andrew Rothman (’00).

With their friends cheering them on, Jason Silver (’00), Jason Sherwood (’02) and Alex Joffe (’01) struggle to claim their rightful place as champion of the Milk Drinking Contest. The playful silliness of this and other Spirit Week events provide fun for all, especially the spectators.
John Horn ('00) and John Abrenilla ('00) engage in swift and careful brush strokes in their painting class. Basic level art classes such as painting enable students with little artistic experience and potential, unexplored talent to further hone their skills in a classroom setting.

Nolan Searles ('02) reads his lines aloud for scene from a Tennessee Williams play. He and other Actor's Studio students will perform these scenes at the annual dinner theatre put on by members of the class. In addition, the department will perform these scenes at each freshmen orientation session in order to promote the arts at East.

Interested upperclassmen attend a college conference for the University of Chicago in the A-wing principal's conference room. Throughout the fall and winter, many colleges send representatives to help arouse interest in their respective universities. This particular conference proved to be a very popular one.

Gigi Bona ('01) lines up a shot in Intermediate Photography. Photo classes are among the most popular art electives at East. Since they are only open to juniors and seniors, upperclassmen such as Bona jumped at the opportunity to enroll in and explore photography.
Keeping his eye steadily on the ball, Gene Hu ('02) takes a swing during a pickup softball game in gym class. Physical education provides exposure to a wide variety of activities, ranging from softball and tennis to pickleball and ping-pong, all the while giving students access to ample exercise and enjoyment.

Timun Dhyken ('03) copies the assigned illustrations from his textbook in drafting class. Drafting meticulously combines art and engineering in a graceful but delicate union that requires both careful accuracy and precise measurement. Here, Dhyken focuses on a basic assignment which will teach him how to create his own drawings.

Dave Wolkach ('00) takes time before Music Theory AP to rehearse a piece he is working on with his private piano instructor. The music department provides classes on every skill level, from entry level Freshman Wind Ensemble to advanced placement Theory. "They recognize that everyone has a unique starting point, and that everyone needs time to practice," said Wolkach.

Jim Worfers ('00) uses a power drill to construct a project for his woodshop class. Industrial technology courses such as woodshop enable students to gain experience working with their hands and working with household hardware machinery. The courses offer students an opportunity to learn to create something useful and very practical.

It's that time again, when the first signs of a new season begins to sprout underneath the thin cloak of winter, when the murmur of new life begins to stir in nature ... and also time to choose next year's schedule of classes. In a school as large as East, the multitude of different classes and electives provide a ready variety to fit an infinite array of interests. Students can participate in electives ranging from woodshop to cosmetology, thus giving them a chance to rewind for a period after a steady flow of textbook classes. Thea Dorado ('01) said, "Electives are good because I can enjoy the class without stressing over big tests — and still do my best, minus the worrying about grades." Taking classes of interest not only lets the student relax, but also inspires more active input into the material. Raki Vanmaa ('01) said, "You always find something you like — and feel like I'm a part of something when I participate in my art class." With so many benefits, it is no wonder that some electives are among the most popular alternatives to an otherwise busy day.

Classes Of Interest
Dorothy Ting ('01) blows out the candle on her cake as she celebrates her birthday with a group of close friends at the Joy Palace. Interesting restaurants like the Joy Palace offer special touches to celebrations.

Judy Wu ('00) buys a ticket to see a movie at AMC Marlton 8, one of the many movie theaters near Cherry Hill that offers the latest releases for teenagers to see with a group of friends.

Term paper season sends students, such as Colleen Corey ('00), to the Cherry Hill Library looking for the right books to support their ideas. Corey sifts through the stacks for sources for the important paper, hoping to complete one stage in the process.

During one of her long shifts at the Animal Orphanage, Genevieve LaFerriere ('00) sifts through paperwork that is important to her furry friends. As an aspiring veterinarian, LaFerriere says that "Learning how to organize is a less enjoyable but necessary skill that adds to the overall experience gained by working at the orphanage."

Melling Gao ('02) placidly sips her iced mocha frappuccino in a comfortable chair at Starbucks, which has fast become a popular place to spend time with friends. The coffee shop offers a warm atmosphere where teenagers can go after school on weekends and enjoy their own favorite caffeinated drinks.

When Seniors Srdjan Vukovic, Howard Chang, Sarah Cho, Jeff Wang and Peter Ro have a vacant morning before exams, they relax at local diners and eateries, surrounded with good food and great friends. The coming of midterms each year marks a week of stress, studying, and breakfast.
Deep in thought at the GAP in the Echelon Mall, Olivia Wu ('02) debates whether or not the jacket in front of her is worth the price. Wu and others use the mall as a place to relax while buying what they need.

Bzzzzzzz ... The last bell of the day rings, and a swarm of students engulfs the halls. However, ten minutes later, the halls revert to emptiness, with only a few students occasionally passing by. Where did all the students go? They each part in their own paths. Some work, some study, and some play. Just as not two people are alike, East students differ in their after school activities.

Many students, especially upperclassmen, have another huge responsibility other than school work: jobs. "I work as much as I can because I need the money," said Khang Ngo ('00). Whether at home, the library, or school, studying is another important aspect of one's day. Who can manage school or work without a break? No healthy student can survive. That is the reason many students shop or just hang out with friends in various areas of the community.

No matter what activity a student does, one thing is obvious — we all do something after the bell rings at 2:25 P.M. That's the time when students start the day all over again. "After school activities and jobs are great because it's a nice change of pace from school," said Maxine Barish ('02). Work, study, or play? The possibilities are endless.

Candyce Muns ('00) rings up an order as part of her duties as a cashier at Starbucks, the popular after school coffee house that captivates people with its variety of hot and iced coffees.

Robert Dell’Aquila ('01) scans an item for a price as he goes about his daily duties at Staples, one of the two popular places for students to rush to for last minute copies of papers and ink cartridges for the printers.
TIME TO SOCIALIZE

Teachers can teach students subjects ranging from math to art history, but a complete education includes social interaction as well. Realizing the complex relationships and rules that constitute society is a lengthy process that the student must undertake individually. Activities and grades may partially determine a student's future, but the friendships are what mold the student's personality. Within the four years of high school, many opportunities such as club meetings and dances give students the chance to form a variety of relationships with their peers. During lunch periods, for example, many students meet in groups to just talk or help each other with homework — experiences that all strengthen their friendship with each other. Melissa Chung ('01) said, "I think it is really good to get together with friends and socialize, because the more friends you have, the more experience you have with different types of people." After all, having bookmarks alone will not do much good unless one acquires the appropriate social skills to apply the intelligence to the real world.

Iram Malik ('03) and Jen Wong ('03) share a friendly conversation as they prepare to delve into their precious vending machine "pep foods." Students use the vending machines in the halls of East to help sustain them through their busy schedules.

When the chaos of a normal day at CHHSE takes over, nothing can suffer more than stressed friendships. Todd Rasher ('03) and Lisa Browne ('03) solve that problem by relaxing on the stairs of the school while sharing the latest news of the day.

Melissa Medoway ('02) takes time out to explain a problem to her friends after school. The mini study session doubles as socializing time for busy students who want to spend time with their friends while juggling homework and activities.

A group of students gather in front of the Little Theater before school to catch up and finish homework at the last minute. For many students, the 15 minutes before homeroom is one of the few times when they can see their friends without having to worry about rushing to class.

During the 5 minutes between classes, students laugh as they socialize while making their ways to class in the crowded stairwell. The break between classes allow students to relax for a few minutes and prepare themselves for the next 42-minute period.
Adam Nash ('02), Royce Agner ('02) and Rob Abelow ('02) study the multiple cell stages of mitosis in Biology. Working within groups in academic subjects reduces the demand on each student and simultaneously increases the aptitude of each student to learn the material.

Rich Cintron ('00), Neil Bang ('00), Chris Reilly ('00) and Kyle Dallas ('00) dive into their long-awaited lunches. As the pressure of class subsides senior year, lunch is less a time to frantically make up past homework assignments, and more of a chance to sit back, relax, and enjoy the food and the people.

As students run every which way to try to get to class before the bell catches them. Elizabeth Klauser ('01) and Marissa McKinney ('01) pause for a few valuable seconds to exchange a smile and a few snippets of news to hold them over until the end of the day.

Kate Dickeman ('00) and Alexis Ramos ('00) strike a daring pose during photography class. Photography provides students with a unique technological experience as well as with the irrefutable opportunity to totally and utterly express themselves. Here, the sentiment is definitely love and friendship.

After the bell rings to release students from class, teenagers pour out of classrooms for a five minute break. As other students hurry through the busy hallway trying to get to class on time, Sherrin Levin ('00) relaxes by sharing a laugh with Jessica Lynch ('00) as the two friends head down C wing to their next classes.

Gabriel Abrams ('02) and Symbol Lai ('02) stifles a laugh as they collaborate on work in the library. When working on a hard project, a little laughter goes a long way toward relieving tension.
The band Dew, consisting of Zach Abo ('02), Adam Barsky ('02), Royce Agner ('02), and Michael Leffowitz ('02), jams out as their furry pink mascot bunny joins them on stage. Battle of the Bands is both a night of riveting performances and unusual, but humorous, surprises. Junior Miss competitors, including Rachel Cetel ('00, bottom right), cheerfully applaud a fellow contestant after her dance in the talent competition. Contestants in Junior Miss spend a lot of time together rehearsing and earn great friendships in the process.

Kyle Horn ('03), the "crazy jig kid," demonstrates his hilarious dance routine and excellent improvisation skills at the SGA Variety Show. Although it has been penned to his name, the dance Horn performs is not actually a jig, but a combination of a lot of different dances with the sole intention of being humorous.

In her deep, soulful alto voice, Chrissy Hayes ('00) woos an attentive audience with her rendition of "Fly Away" at the annual SGA Variety Show. Hayes' extraordinary talent is very well reputed and adored, and she loves to be able to share it with others in performance. The audience loves it, too.
Many exciting activities occur at East, but none contain the competitiveness experienced at the Variety Show, Battle of the Bands, and Junior Miss. Many students at East either directly participate in these competitions or actively show their support as audience members.

At the Variety Show, various students from East display their unique talents to their peers. Such talents often comprise of singing, dancing, and other entertaining performances. It is always fun to watch and cheer on this great display of talented East students. Battle of the Bands allows students involved in a band to compete against similar students bands at a loud, excitement filled musical performance involving dancers and special effects of fog and multicolored lights. This competition allows students to showcase their musical abilities and also offers an exciting way to spend a Friday night. Junior Miss is a competition for talented senior high school girls. The winner receives money to help pay off their huge college tuition bill. Despite the rivalries involved in these types of competitions, they are always a means of a good time for all.

After finishing her vocal piece, Rachel Cetel ('00) concludes her performance for Junior Miss judges and audience members with a dramatic pause. Junior Miss is a talent scholarship competition for senior girls, and Cetel, East's 2000 representative, loved her chance to be a part of it. The combination of publicly performing and speaking, along with the opportunity to earn money for college fit Cetel's goals perfectly.

Pete Myers ('00) hugs the ebony neck of his PRS guitar as the spotlights - and the eyes of the crowd - steadfastly fix their gaze upon him. His fingers pound out one of the songs he has perfected for Battle of the Bands, as the crowd responds enthusiastically to Myers's musical talent.
On the way to her next class a few minutes ahead of schedule, Melissa Eisenmenger (’00) takes time to glance up at the latest “Athlete of the Week” display at the C-wing intersection. Students with the blessing of a pizza and free time leave class early heartily embrace the chance to walk the halls without clutter or confusion.

Danielle Thomas (’03) creates a detailed pastel portrait of a white tiger in Foundations of Art, a basic level art course. The image was created by tracing a projected outline of the tiger and then coloring it in with pastel crayons. Foundations assignments entail a lot of work but ultimately produce beautiful works of art.

Gingerly handling a valuable piece of pizza, Brooke Urs (’00) helps raise funds for RAK at an after-school sale. The Activities office pizza and pretzels almost offer pizza and pretzels sales to willing clubs in order to raise funds. Here, the money will be used for helping others.

There’s no pressure here—no teachers checking homework, no one telling you to go somewhere else, no one invading your space. No, these hallways belong to the students.

In the hallways, students find both solitude and study time. Or, as many prefer, the hallways are a place to sit against a locker and catch up on the latest news in the lives of close friends. Still others just like to lie around in the hallway and hope that nobody finds them and makes them go where they’re supposed to be.

Whether it’s to chat or to cram, students make use of every bit of empty space in the building as well as every bit of free time they have. For, in the whole scheme of things, a personal moment or two can make a world of difference.
Jodi Katz ('01) unleashes a bubble as she reflects on her busy day and proceeds to her next class. A devoted drama department student in preparation for the Spring musical, "Anything Goes," Katz takes advantage of every free moment she has simply to think.

Wendy Adler ('02) responds to her summons at the Communications window in between morning classes. Communications is the most effective link between students and those trying to get in contact with them during the school day. Here, Adler picks up something left for her by a parent.

Jane Cabalo ('00) hastily studies cross-pollination patterns in preparation for the next period's Biology II exam. Cabalo's locker, situated directly ahead of the student entrance, provides a quiet study atmosphere free of disturbances. These few moments are essential to busy students such as Cabalo, who spends her entire day in class without a break.

Liz Welch ('02) fills her bag with the day's essentials before proceeding to a daily homeroom rehearsal of Bellas of East. Many students, such as Welch, have obligatory duties every morning before classes commence. These commitments cut down the valuable time spent preparing for the day, academically and socially, but also enforce a degree of student responsibility and dedication.
Looking To The Future

Students' use of technology

As teenagers growing up in a time when email, cell phones, and video games were as rampant as the books of the generation past, today's students depend more and more on technology to do virtually everything for them. From communicating via fiber-optic wires to researching for a paper online, more and more students are connected to the world beyond their neighborhood. Twenty years before, homework had to be swapped by hand — now, there is email and within a few clicks of the mouse, the virtual message flies to the recipient's "mailbox." Danielle Kraus (00) said, "It's so much easier now for me to keep in touch with people with the cell phones and email, whereas a decade ago, Federal Express was considered the fastest way to send mail." Because of this technological explosion, it is almost inevitable to become dependent on the gadgets to do even the simplest tasks, such as writing down the day's list of things to do. With the advent of the PalmPilot, students can now jot down everything they need to record electronically, then send the information to their friends or teachers in the form of an email.

On the other end of the spectrum, fun has undergone a digital transformation as well. Gone is the pastime of reading; instead, enter the domain of PlayStation and DVDs. With ever-expanding cable networks and online multimedia stations competing for students' attentions, it is no wonder that taking the time out to read a novel has become too time-consuming in this age of speed.
Jamie Gorczynski ('00) relaxes during a free period, while listening to her Discman. A popular brand of technology, the Discman allows students to listen to their favorite songs anywhere, from a long jog to a ride in the car.

"It's so much easier now for me to keep in touch with people with the cell phones and email ..." - Danielle Kraus ('00).

During lunch in the cafeteria, Lauren Marlowe ('00) and Sam Katz ('00) solve a problem using a graphing calculator, a necessary tool used for complicated problems. Several teachers use graphing calculators in conjunction with lessons to allow students to transfer the problems from paper to a picture on a screen.

Instead of wasting precious minutes guessing the meaning of a difficult word, Dave Ho ('02) simply types the word into his electronic dictionary, a portable device that gives concise answers whenever or wherever a student needs them.
CULTURAL CREATIVITY

Walking down the halls of East, one may notice a wide variety of different races and cultures. East has long been proud of its diverse and colorful student population, which has led to the creation of the many culture clubs and activities at East.

However, some students often dedicate much of their time to out-of-school cultural activities. Whether it is dance, singing, music, or church activities, these activities help students to enjoy themselves while uniting them, with their cultural backgrounds.

Priti Ohja ('02) currently holds the number one rank internationally in Indian contemporary film dance. She performs at various competitions and has also had experience with world-renowned actresses.

“I love to dance to Indian music because it allows me to connect to my culture,” said Ohja. “My mother instilled it in me, and I am glad to carry on the Indian tradition.”

Michael Ko ('01) enjoys practicing and performing with the Chinese yo-yo. He performs at numerous festivals and is constantly learning new tricks from people he meets.

Peter Millili ('00) is involved with Greek dancing and other activities at his church in Cherry Hill. Each year, the church presents a Greek Agora festival, which celebrates Greek culture, and with which Millili is actively involved.

Activities such as these are just a sampling of the multitudes that East students are involved in. Culture is an essential part of growth, and the vitality of these students is what keeps it alive across generations.

Brotherhood — that is just one of the cultural values that the African American Club try to instill in its members. Reggie Cintrone ('02) greets a friend with the customary warmth that surpasses ethnic differences. Being in AAC has helped Cintrone and others become more tolerant and understanding of their culture and others' diversity.

Priti Ohja ('02) performs Indian dances all over the United States. Here she is seen competing in California. She feels her Indian dancing connects her to her culture.
How do you say “culture” in Chinese? Just ask the members of the Chinese Culture Club. Topics ranging from language to traditional and contemporary Chinese customs are discussed, and avid members like Ying-Ying Deng (‘01) and Yao Ping (‘02) take pride in their heritage.

Roma Pandya (‘00) and Neelam Shah (‘01) confer about the upcoming Indian Culture Society meeting. Both students participate in ICS because it gives them a chance to be with their friends and learn about their unique link to each other. “It’s a great club to just come and relax — and learn about your past, present and future as an ethically rich person,” Pandya said.

It is the only event at school where students can bid for some of the most sought-after … people. Yes — you heard right. Every year, Asian Culture Society holds their Service Event — an “auction” that combines a healthy, dose of humor with a good cause; all the proceeds go to charity. “ACS promotes cultural awareness for all, not just Asians.” said Nick Chong (‘00), a member and participant at this year’s event.

Foreign Signs

Many times, foreign countries try to translate their language into English too literally. Here are just a couple of examples of botched up signs:

Elevator: “Please leave your values at the front desk.”
Hotel Notice: “Visitors are expected to complain at the office between the hours of nine and eleven a.m. daily.”
Sign in dress shop: “Ladies have fits upstairs.”
Hotel Desk: “If you consider our help impolite you should see the manager.”
In a Tokyo hotel: “Is forbidden to steal hotel towels please. If you are not a person to do such a thing is please not to read notices.”
In a Swiss mountain inn: “Special today—No ice cream.”
In a door of a Moscow hotel room: “If this is your first visit to the USSR, you are welcome to it.”
In a Budapest zoo: “Please do not feed the animals. If you have any suitable food, give it to the guard on duty.”
In a Tokyo shop: “Our nylons cost more then common, but you’ll find they are the best in the long run.”

Ben Levy (’01) shares upcoming French Club information with an interested passerby in the hall. Members such as Levy get the word out about meetings and other events to underclassmen and other non-members who may be interested in joining. All culture clubs, regardless of their concentration, are open to anyone who has any interest in the specific culture, or who just wants to expand his or her horizons.

Members of the Jewish Culture Club participate in a trivia game at the group's annual Hanukkah party. A relatively new group in the large spectrum of culture clubs and societies at East, the Jewish Culture Club has nonetheless attracted many members and active participants in its activities. Group functions such as this celebrate Jewish holidays and traditions, while involving group members in a fun activity.

Nicolas Pedone ('01) a member of the German Club, checks a hallway sign to find out about the group's next meeting. Many students like Pedone take advantage of the many culture-based groups at East to learn more about as many cultures as possible. Devoted members find that culture clubs provide a greater understanding between individuals of different cultures.

Members of the German Club gather before a meeting to finalize plans for upcoming cultural events. In past years movie screenings of German films such as “Das Boot” have increased students' appreciation of not just traditional, but contemporary German culture in well-

AIDS is no longer a medical problem as much as it is a social problem. Many people do not understand it and the problems it causes. This year, the AIDS Awareness club meets every Tuesday to discuss the world epidemic. "AIDS is a dangerous disease and can be prevented from spreading through caution and education," Crystal Wu ('01) says.

Counting their profits, Vivek Kumar (‘91), John Li (‘00) and Ismail Verma (‘92) saw a profit sale to fund GLOBE activities. In order to maintain the survival of their club, officers must organize some sort of fundraising event. GLOBE the many other school activities, takes advantage of time, talent, and talent at the school. Other students within the school are able to provide funding for their fellow classmates activities and events. A nice offer school much.

When a person says that a woman is just as good as a man, not only women but men also support this idea. In SAGE, students learn to support this idea with Ariel Fire (‘00) as their leader. She says, "The evolution of gender issues of the past thirty years is fascinating. No longer is there a definite goal of female groups as in past generations. Rather, the establishment of universal equality for both sides has moved into the forefront of all other political, social, and private issues."

Watching a presentation, Donna Marmaril ('00) and Maureen Stolzer ('00) take many notes. Each year, members of AIDS Awareness plan and then create Easter baskets for children with AIDS. Donna comments, "AIDS Awareness is meant to help inform students about the effects of AIDS and to understand those who are inflicted with the disease. I especially love making Easter baskets in April to give to children with the disease."
Dangerous Minds

All the grunt work, long hours after school and practices will soon pay off. The team members have slaved for weeks to prepare for this competition, and in an hour or two, the agonizing bus ride will come to an end — and then, only then, will the real sweating begin in the precious few minutes before the debate.

Debate?

Yes — while many students assume that fierce competition plus pressure to win equals athletics, the fact of the matter is that at East, clubs such as Certamen, Chess Club and Mock Trial all incorporate competitions into their annual seasons. Like the Varsity sports teams, each year the pressure rises as rival Mock Trial teams go head-to-head against each other for Championship titles in county, regional, state and even national-level competitions. With such levels of play, stress on the students before each contest mounts. In the chess club, for example, students must prepare themselves for virtually every situation Krzeminski ("00), Captain of the Chess Club, said, "We need to continually drill ourselves on offensive and defensive strategies, just like other competitive activities. In the end, though, the sweet taste of victory makes all the pre-game tension worthwhile.

Joel Rovner ("02) examines his options as his opponent approaches his front line. To play a game of chess requires skill, but to win requires ample skill as well as pure determination. The competition builds in intensity until the final moment, and actually moving a chess piece comes only as the result of careful deliberation and consideration of all possible outcomes.

CHESS CLUB: Arthur (Anthony) Barker, Doug Conway, Dave Firestein, Marc Gnatyuk, Chris Krzeminski, Sam Kim, Yao-Chung King, John Li, Justin Lin, Josh Meyeroff, Charles Osborne, Arif Rahman, Lev Reyzin, Joel Rovner, Josh Wang, Ms. Yang, Ben Zhou. Advisor: Mr. Segrest
Jon Fusfield ('01), Bill Klein ('01), and John Skordos ('01) jot down notes in preparation for an upcoming Certamen competition. The pressure for Certamen members grows gradually throughout the winter months, and culminates in a competition in the Spring.

Ariel Fox ('00) directly examines Dave Firestein ('01) as the two practice their roles as lawyer and witness on the varsity Mock Trial team. Mock Trial comprises two groups of students playing the role of defense and prosecution teams in a case. As an activity, Mock Trial combines legal technique with dramatic role-playing to depict a realistic court scenario.

Minh Ly ('00) rehearses his argument in the Little Theater in order to prepare for an upcoming Debate competition. Much like a sport such as tennis, Varsity Debate teams go head to head against their opponents with just as much pressure to win. Countering and defending one's position takes focus, energy, and a fierce competitiveness.

As Editor-in-chief of Eastside Online, Mike Rosner (00) works daily in F087 to keep the website currently updated with new stories and graphics. Along with his Co-Editor, Jay Kothari (00), Rosner leads a team of staff members who work exclusively to post student issues and news to the rest of the world.

Nayda Lev (01) gives a brief introduction to a movie before members of the Great Books and Movies Club. Meeting weekly, students regularly gather to discuss and appreciate the literary and film contributions of artists such as Arthur Miller and Stanley Kubrick.

Adam Rubin (00), Amanda Winn (01) and Taina Luque (01) gather together to sign off at the end of yet another morning announcement. While many students take for granted the broadcasters' familiar presence "on the air" during the moments before homeroom ends, their roles as messengers are crucial to the success of the information network.

Eastside Opinions Editor Mike Rosenberg (00) measures out a board as he prepares to lay out one of his section's pages. The Opinions section features articles dealing with everything from parking fees to budget concerns. For Rosenberg, his work allows him to express unique perspectives on a variety of student issues.

During a weekly Demogorgon meeting, Aviva Buchman ('00), Laurie Burton ('00) and Caryn Papish ('00) preside over the reading, interpretation, and final selection of poetry and prose. Every year, the editors and staff of Demogorgon publish a literary and art magazine that reflects the emotional journeys of the students through each artist's unique perspective.

Working alongside other Eastside editors, Tom Caruso ('00) and Andrew Schwerin ('00) lay out the boards, or the individual pages, for an upcoming edition of the newspaper. From the copy editing to the final cut, working on the newspaper editorial board is another way that students help tell the story of the events that make up a high school year.

For the past four years, Adam Robin ('00) has actively participated in the morning announcements—an invaluable service to students as well as faculty. In a high school with over twelve hundred students, the morning announcements provide an easy way to reaching out to every student and inform them of issues ranging from club meetings to special notices.

Three...two...one...roll the camera! A familiar refrain for Tasha Lutsk ('01), Jean Sung ('01) and Keith Davis ('00), communication in front of lights and camera defines what the three students do. In addition to the school's various print media, working on the Eastcast staff allows them to convey the objective news via Cable 18.

While sitting comfortable in front of Communications, Lauren Zalot ('01) helps to prepare for the FOP party by organizing a pile of construction paper stars that will become festive decorations for the walls and tables of the party room. By combining creativity and holiday spirit, students are able to produce a successful event.

Cherry Hill is a town constantly growing and taking on new faces. However, the town of Cherry Hill is still a community, and many activities at East keep that in mind.

Each year, a new group of upperclassmen takes the reins of the bi-annual East Blood Drive. This very important activity helps guarantee accident victims, surgical patients and other potential blood recipients in the community a chance at new life. Also, Blood Drive helps to draw East into the community in ways few other activities can.

Adopt-a-Grandparent is a unique activity that enables students to travel to local nursing homes and “adopt” an elderly resident to talk to, share time with, and keep company. Students are always welcome and encouraged to join, but only a handful of students commit themselves to constantly doing their job. This is a source of endless fulfillment and a strong, warmhearted community activity.

The Fraternal Order of Police (FOP) annual Holiday Party committee is another popular community-oriented activity. Students, led by upperclassmen committee chairmen, create decorations and ultimately participate in this celebration, given by the FOP to local children who suffer from mental illnesses or disabilities. This provides a chance for students to reach out to the community and make some children, often neglected, very happy.

Students who participate in these activities are consciously helping the community in which they live. They serve as an opportunity to pay back a town and a school that has given them so much.

REACHING OUT TO OTHERS
As an involved advisor, Mr. Young lectures Adopt-A-Grandparent members on the basic goals of the club, upcoming visits, and the approaching induction ceremony. In one of the most fulfilling activities in the school, participants devote numerous hours of their time to senior citizens who truly appreciate the companionship.

In the cafeteria after-school, freshmen Elise Mitchell ('03) and Kim D’Imperio ('03) cheerfully devote their time to painting a festive sign for the FOP Holiday Party sure to bring smiles to the faces of the children who attend the special party every December.

Smiling as she works on a project, Amber Naqvi ('02) is just one of the many students who enjoy exploring different ways of using their imaginations during meetings of the recently formed Craft Club. Eventually these creations will be given to brighten the day of senior citizens and needy children.

LEND A HELPING HAND

Taking care to paint even the smallest details onto every nook and cranny, Erica Nicoletti ('03) works with other members of the Art Club to give the girl's bathroom a makeover. The project exemplifies the service that can benefit faculty and students by turning a former graffiti problem into a colorful work of art.

Roma Pandya ('00) actively participates in volunteer work and is a member of Random Acts of Kindness Club, an organization started by Melanie Lowe ('00) to inspire students to take time out to do good onto others. From food drives to community cleanups, Pandya and other members of RAK thrive on the spirit of volunteerism. Here, she offers her sign-painting skills to another club.

Lauren Plasky ('00) gives a slice of pizza to a hungry student during a RAK fundraising sale. In order for RAK to have the opportunity to give back during their frequent volunteering events, club members must first sell snacks such as pretzels or pizza in order to raise the money necessary for helping out the school community.

The dull, yellow bathroom stalls of old become a new, vibrant artistic work in progress as Paul Specchler ('02), a member of the Art Club, helps paint a colorful jungle theme on the doors and walls of the girl’s bathroom. Renovating the surroundings has eliminated the past graffiti problem and given future generations of students the gift of a cleaner environment.

Melanie Lowe ('00), Jen Hur ('00), Sarah Fehder ('01), and Sarah Horowitz ('00) discuss upcoming plans for a community food drive during a RAK meeting. By involving themselves in the act of helping others, RAK members also help themselves. They realize that as members of the community who can make a difference they should do as much as they can to help.

Ashly Getson ('00) discusses problem-solving strategies with Adam Hoffman ('01) during a Peer Helpers meeting. Peer Helpers allow students to talk about their experiences and show support for one another. Without a forum for discussing their experiences, many students would not feel as comfortable sharing their ideas.
A Taste Of Things To Come

With three floors, dozens of packed hallways and nearly two thousand students, East is very much a world of its own. However, many students recognize the value of keeping up with the pace of the world outside of school.

Junior Statesmen of America (JSA) and the new International Affairs Club are two organizations that focus on the discussion and debate of current events. While JSA focuses mostly on creating a resolution specific to the topic at hand and subsequently debating that resolution, the International Affairs Club is a more easily paced group that concentrates mainly on friendly discussion.

Another organization, Teens After God (TAG), invigorates its members with open religious discussion and friendly contemplation. TAG recognizes that the teenage, high school years can often be the most difficult and complicated. Thus, TAG draws in religion and friendly openness to help alleviate the daily problems of people who participate in meetings.

Students at East are encouraged to get involved with in-school activities. However, groups such as these help to more personally relate the happenings of the world outside school with a comfortable, friendly in-school setting.

Maria Shi (’01), the president of the International Affairs Club, Dorothy Ting (’01), its Internal vice president, and Rakhi Vanmali (’01), a member, hold a discussion on Chechnya at the club’s second meeting. This recently formed club has bi-weekly meetings where members hold discussions on current world issues.

Most East students go through life without the adrenaline rush of becoming a totalitarian despot. Junior Statesmen of America allows aspiring fascist dictators to role play as their favorites while discussing pertinent current affairs. Props are provided to complete the characters and defensive measures if the discussion becomes too heated.
Jamie Beran ('01) buys a piece of pizza as Maria Shi ('01), Dorothy Ting ('01), and Rakul Vannmati ('01) sell the rest as part of the fundraising activities for International Affairs Club. Shi is currently the President. New clubs such as these rely heavily on their members to come out and assist with fundraising and publicity events.

Chrissy Hayes ('01) and Maureen Stolzer ('01), officers of TAG (Teens After God), make a presentation at one of their meetings. This club focuses on the religious aspect of the world, where members can talk about God, their beliefs, and the role religion plays in everyday life, and in a public school.

Esther Simpson ('03) and Serena Sun ('03) sign up to see Veggi Tales in TAG, a club where members devote themselves to pursuing their religion. Teens After God has risen in popularity since it replaced the Fellowship of Christian Athletes as a religiously oriented activity.

From All Ends

Genna Frantz ('01), a junior class representative, makes a sign promoting the junior prom: "I enjoy contributing to my class and making a difference in our school," says Frantz. Part of SGA's responsibility includes organizing events such as dances and spirit week events.

The junior class advisor, Mr. Haines, discusses sophomore cotillion plans with Catherine Kolozay ('01) and Jonathan Cetel ('01). Advisors keep the Student Government Association running smoothly. Most have had many years experience in advising class governments and can pass this on to students, telling them what has worked in the past and what has not.

Keith Erickson ('00) and Arun Handa ('02) work at their computers to perfect their programs used in competition. Both measured up to the competition, with Keith placing third and Arun first in each of their programs. These events may become the sports events of the future, some speculate.

Smiles wide, members of the Chinese Dance Club, conclude their routine in a weekly rehearsal. As one of the main choreographers, Jen Wang ('02) (center), enjoys being able to express her artistic talent to the rest of the school by dancing on Multicultural Day. She passes this gift on to other students by helping them learn her cultural dances at weekly meetings.

CHINESE CULTURAL DANCE CLUB: Jennifer Wang (President), Jade Goh (Vice President), Stephanie Chang, Alice Hong, Chihin Lee, Z Lu, Sherry Lu, Ryan Pang, Jennifer Tan, Jennifer Wang, Sophia Wong, Crystal Wu, Peggy Yang. Advisor: Mrs. Shuster.

Practicing their dance routine, Natali Gleimer ('01) and Sammy Zweben ('01) enjoy their break from their regular academic courses. Students who participate in clubs not only have a chance to express their talents, but also have a great opportunity to become an active part of the school's numerous activities. Along with participating in the school's dance club, both Natali and Sammy dedicate most of their free time to dancing with their dance companies.

Mr. Mamidian, a librarian, carefully instructs Nancy Williams ('02), a library aide, on how to assist students and teachers who come into the library with something in mind. Library aides willingly devote lunch periods, study halls, and free time to helping others in need of research or reading materials in the sometimes ever-changing array of books and materials within the library.

Year after year, we entered East in September; no longer nervous, but increasingly excited to enter a school that was already familiar. The thrill of it all lay in realizing the differences in everything and everyone around us. Even when we had thought we knew it all, things constantly changed. That was the true essence of learning what the textbooks didn’t teach.
As students process back and fourth through D-wing during the course of the day, the familiar sound of a skillfully played trumpet fills both the air and the ears of the passersby. Behind the closed door of the boy's dressing room each note resonates, a culmination of years of skillful practice and hard work.

Mr. Timothy Keleher, conductor of Jazz Band, Freshman Wind Ensemble, and Symphonic Band, has certainly made a name for himself here at East. Young, good-natured, and full of energy, he earns both the admiration and respect of his students. "He's a great guy," said Justin Friedman ('00). "A pleasure to work with and great at what he does."

In addition to conducting three groups, Keleher teaches Music Theory AP, a valuable and difficult music elective. He applies the same vigor and dedication to his teaching as he does to his conducting.

Although he is well respected, Keleher had a lot of pressure on him upon his debut in East's music department. He was taking over the job of former band director Roy Hough, who had retired, and then passed away. The venerable Hough was admired and respected for his years of experience, and the relatively young Keleher had a lot to live up to.

However, Keleher quickly commanded the respect of the faculty and students at East. His constant devotion to improving his own excellent trumpet skills while developing the skills of his students through constant practice has shone through, and Keleher has undoubtedly proven that he is worthy to the task.

Justin Friedman ('00) attentively awaits his cues as a percussionist in Symphonic Band. Percussionists must always remain in sync with the conductor, and, as Friedman puts it, "Even just watching Keleher conduct gives me a rush."

Lila Buchalski ('01) and Annette Gabay ('02) skillfully blow a deep breath while practicing on stage immediately before a concert. Their instrument, the bass clarinet, uniquely blends rhythm, harmony, and melody. Here, the musicians practice under Mr. Keleher's expert guidance so that they will have a successful performance.
Shoes To Fill

Mr. Keleher vigorously demonstrates his conducting movements in preparation on the night of the winter band concert, as the Symphonic Band looks on. Rarely can one get a glimpse of this man standing still while he's doing his job; his entire body moves in the passionate relationship he has established with the music.

Elena Medina ('02) focuses on Keleher's movements to obtain her starting point in the piece. As a flutist, her part sometimes involves sudden, quick trills and high notes, and requires careful observance of the conductor so as to properly blend in with the rest of the Symphonic Band.

Saxophonists of Symphonic Band contribute their soulful dynamics to one of the group's winter concert pieces. Symphonic Band provides a transition from Freshman Wind Ensemble to Wind Ensemble, but it also provides an opportunity for wind players to hone their skills and develop "soul" that will give a positive spin on all their endeavors.

Chris Zizzamia ('01) releases a deep breath while adding his part to the Symphonic Band's overall sound. Tuba players have to allow themselves plenty of time to take breaths in between notes. Here, Zizzamia skillfully follows Keleher's direction and simultaneously paces his playing keeping the band in tempo.

Trumpeters Dan Chou ('03) and Boris Lau ('03) make their presence known during a first period Freshman Wind Ensemble rehearsal. Sometimes, in the morning, it's tough to find the energy to create enough wind to power these musicians who aren't morning people.
The musical life is one of both relief and occasional disappointment. And so it goes for the many dedicated students involved in the instrumental music department, who must audition each year, whether to move up in the chain of bands, or keep their current position. Brass, woodwind players, and percussionists all start from the same place - Freshman Wind Ensemble. From there, musicians must work hard to advance. The next step is Symphonic Band and then comes Wind Ensemble, which is on a significantly higher skill level. These two groups are chosen through audition. Musicians make it into Wind Ensemble through a combination of talent and hard work. Once players make it to this group, their possibilities are endless.

Each year Mr. Yurko, the conductor, says that the Wind Ensemble is better than the last. Although this seems unbelievable it is true. As Mr. Yurko improves himself each year he envisions the same improvement for Wind Ensemble and expects it. With his hard work and passion for music he makes the band sound like an ensemble.

Mr. Yurko handpicks the top musicians for both Chamber Winds and Brass Ensemble, two small and highly selective musical groups. He also chooses a select few to play with Orchestra and Pit Orchestra. Rising up in the musical ranks is part of the thrill of being a musician. It takes quite a bit of work and dedication, but as Mr. Yurko himself always says - take a deep breath - and the same goes for success.
The Wind Ensemble rests for a second as their conductor Mr. Yurko rehearses a particular section. It is often necessary to repeatedly work with a certain section in order to perfect their contribution to the whole piece. Sometimes this may take a minute, other times a whole period, but it is imperative that it be done, for perfection is achieved only through practice.

Howard Chang ('00), Dave Firestein ('01), and Eric Moskowitz ('00), first clarinetists, warm up by rehearsing their clarinet parts before the winter concert. The key to a good concert is balance and intonation. Certain sections can not over power others. They try to make three sound like one by playing perfectly in tune.

Adam Bussey ('00) concentrates on conserving his air while taking a quick glance at his music. Wind Ensemble musicians are expected to have a good hold on their instrument, but they also have to be able to balance their sound between music and conductor, so as not to fall behind the beat of the group.

Megan Kelly ('00) focuses intently on Mr. Yurko's direction as the Wind Ensemble puts final touches on a piece before the concert. As a senior flutist and piccolo player, Kelly helps lead her section, strengthening the entire flute section as a whole.
As students walk down D-wing, they can hear different melodies emitted by various string instruments almost any period. That's because this year, orchestra started having rotating lessons. Each section of the orchestra meets once a week with Mrs. Greenspan, the new string teacher, for one different period every week to work on the music or just plain scales.

This new program was adopted as a result of the wide gap between the abilities of the members of the orchestra. Last year, there were two orchestras. All the members auditioned and the better half of the orchestra formed the Ensemble. Mr. Yurko conducted the Ensemble and Mrs. Kasinskas the string orchestra, the other half of the full orchestra. The Ensemble played harder pieces, such as Hoe Down, which required more skill. This way, all the string players could play to their full potential and the weaker members could play music suitable for their level.

By having weekly rotating music lessons, the less proficient string players are able to spend more time strengthening their skills, thereby improving the entire orchestra, since a group is only as strong as its weakest link. Mr. Yurko hopes that by giving certain members that extra boost, the whole orchestra will sound better.

Despite the resumption of a one orchestra policy, there are still many opportunities for adept string players to show their abilities. Many of the members audition to become part of the All-South Jersey Orchestra. Those who make it then audition for the All-State Orchestra. Seniors get an extra chance by applying to PAVAS, an organization that supports the performing arts.

Maria Shi (‘01) and Vicki Chou (‘00) join the first violin section in rehearsing part of the Opera Night music, while the second violins and the rest of the orchestra rest. Rehearsal is a constant stretch of starting and stopping at different intervals in the music, and the first and senior violinists are among the hardest worked members of the orchestra.

Feversomely pounding notes in Ernest Bloch's bizarre twentieth century work "Concerto Grosso," Jen Tan (‘02) and Dave Gaden (‘00) gaze intently at their music for the first time. Sight reading is an essential ability in advanced musical groups such as string orchestra, where the skill is assumed to be present in all members.

Mr. Yurko energetically leads the orchestra in the rather difficult Prelude movement of the “Lady Radnor’s Suite” by Hubert Parry. As the year progresses Mr. Yurko selects more difficult music for his orchestra to play, and he attempts to increase the amount of music performed. “My goal is to perform forty-five minutes of music at the Spring concert, not just eleven minutes,” said Yurko.

Mike Cheung (‘00) and Rachel Wu (‘02) rehearse the Overture to Telemann’s “Lustige Suite for Strings.” The music that Mr. Yurko selects for orchestra each year is on a professional level, much higher than students have experienced in middle school or elsewhere. “I don’t know of any other high school orchestra in the area that is playing Telemann,” said Yurko.

In Perfect Harmony

Chrissy Hayes ('00) has shown the dedication and talent to advance through the choral groups from Vocal Workshop up to East Singers. As a group, East Singers performs in perfect harmony, however, solos still shine through just like Chrissy’s beautiful alto voice.

Complete Concentration appears on the face of Fran Delledici ('02) as Vocal Workshop performs another piece. Teamwork is crucial to having everyone sing as a group. Each member must put aside nervousness, anxiety, and the rush of performing in order to contribute to the group’s performance as a whole.

Working hard through all four years of high school and sharing a love for singing are two characteristics of all East Singers. To make it into this advanced group is quite an accomplishment and honor. It is a goal of all East’s singers, especially seniors, such as Debbie Chang ('00) and Gary Ko ('00), who have met their goal.

Anyone who casually strolls down D-wing during the school day is bound to hear the familiar sounds of vocal warm-ups coming from the vocal rooms.

"Mee... may... mah... no... mu..."

One cannot help but stop, listen, and peer into the room, anxiously anticipating the inherent flow of wonderful music.

The Vocal Department is a very open and receiving place. Anyone can sign up to take a vocal class - no experience required - and may partake in the joy that is vocal music.

However, the true challenge lies in progression. The dedicated, hardworking vocal student can, by the diligence of practice, rise up in the ranks. Vocal Workshop is an entry-level class that teaches the basics of college, rhythm, and technique. Concert Choir is a step higher, where the student can combine learned skill with natural talent in a more advance setting. Finally, there are East Singers and Chansons, whose members are of the most practiced and advanced of the East Vocal Department.

Progression for group to group is achieved by audition, hard work, and practice. The Vocal Department, however, is a warm and receptive place to meet new friends, develop talent, and make the most out of music.

Discipline, talent, and enthusiasm define Concert Choir. One difference between good and great singing lies in the absolute joy they receive when performing. Emily Goldenthal (’01) beams as the music flows around her.

Ronjon Bose (’04), a Freshman, and Andrew Keller (’00), a Senior, represent the diversity of Chorus. Both have found a love for singing and have been driven to begin to satisfy such a love by joining Vocal Workshop. Singing is a skill that anyone can enjoy and it is never too late to find that passion.

Concert Choir is a group with a style similar to that of East Singers, with both male and female vocals. It represents a balance medium between Vocal Workshop and East Singers. Jennifer Pajdak (’00) exhibits all the hard work put into preparing for the winter concert. Singing is all about performing for others.

A key part of chorus is to be in sync. Chansons, an all girl choir is uniform in both attire and performance. The idea is for all the distinct voice to harmonize together in order to form one voice from many. Jodi Katz (’01), Jenni Joyce (’02), and Christa Wesley (’02) perform as one.

With A Bit Of Flair

The audience quickly marvels at the beautiful costumes and cheerful harmony produced by the Madrigal Singers as they walk onto the stage at a concert. They stare in cordial admiration at the singers, who glance merrily at each other, exchanging sweet smiles and romantic faces.

Contrarily, the audience roars in laughter as thirteen young men clad in shirts, ties, coats and blue jeans come running onto the stage in a fit of energy and song. The men of Casual Harmony have made their entrance, and the audience awaits another fun-filled performance.

Children and parents alike stare with wide-eyed wonder as the Belles of East, flowing in their melodic gowns, process onto the stage and accompany themselves with handbells. The audience agrees that the singing and ringing creates a uniquely pleasant listening experience.

Elegance and grace then march onto the stage. This next group does not sing but performs with their bells, charming the audience. Dressed all in black their professionalism shines through.

In addition to simply singing, these small ensembles all find ways of bringing their souls to the surface to share with the audience, in ways that the audience appreciates and looks forward to.

The real beauty of these groups, however, is in their ability to combine unique performances with dedicated community service. They are constantly in demand by a community that grows to love them. Belles, Madrigals, Celebrations, and Casual Harmony all perform at various community functions, benefit concerts, and private institutions, all year long.

For the members of these ensembles, the friendships formed are every bit as fun and important as the music and performance. All the groups are student directed, and are advised by Ms. Steele (Belles, Madrigals, Celebrations) and Ms. Ferguson (Casual Harmony). Thus, the musicians learn to work together and rely on each other as teammates and friends.

"The small-sized ensembles are a great chance to combine an expression of talent with much needed community service." Dave Gadren ('00)

In The Spotlight

From musicals to melodramas, revues to revivals, the Thespians have performed them all. Besides for the fall and spring shows, performing artists participate in much more than just the two mainstage shows. Other performing arts activities such as Meme Company and Madrigals fit into many students’ busy schedules, and still they find time to act in the annual One-Act plays, which are all directed and produced by students. Why the phenomenal variety of different theatrical productions? Perhaps the greatest asset to students dedicated to the theater department is the diversity of plays and clubs to join. For Sam Rosenberg ('01), for example, dividing his time between Meme Company, Casual Harmony, and Thespian Society as well as acting in almost every East production is a way for him to extend his capabilities as an artist. “I love it all—I mean, I have a passion, a drive for doing all of this that I do,” Rosenberg said. “Some people may look at the workload and groan, but I just see a bigger challenge to take on. For me, just going out there and performing and loving what I do—I live for it.” His active role in the performing arts since freshman year has given Rosenberg increased breadth in a wide variety of theatrical genres, something invaluable to a versatile actor. Like Rosenberg, Liz Klausner ('01) agrees that the vast array of theatrical productions every year motivates her to do her best in all three aspects of performing: singing, dancing and acting. “For me personally, I have the chance to do all three and work hard on them because the music department, the spring show and the One-Acts gives me the experience I need to add to my theatrical repertoire,” Klausner said.

Colleen Martin ('00) makes sure every little detail is up to par before another performance. Under Martin’s watchful eye, the set makes all the difference in making the show a success, for, along with other members of stage crew, her job is to make sure the setting coincides authentically with the image that the playwright envisioned originally.

Bravo! Kristin Malotti ('02) congratulates Sam Rosenberg ('01) on a job well done after the hub-bub of yet another successful performance of the classic, American and Old Lace. After all the hard work that went into making his character come alive, Rosenberg credits the joy of performing as the perfect gratification for his efforts.

Doubles for the night, Liz Klausner ('01) and her red cast "twin," Melissa Kellner ('01) rehearse their lines before opening night. Both students actively participate in other performing arts activities in addition to the fall show. Klausner, for example, sings, plays the piano and dances outside of acting.

Preparing for his dramatic revelation as Billy in the spring musical, Anything Goes, Adam Finkel ('02) stands amidst the crowd, awed at his impending speech. Serious moments like this one along with the slapstick humor interspersed in between helped make the show a success. In order to portray the characters and bring them to life, however, the cast of the show spent numerous hours in relentless rehearsal.

There's somethin' wrong here! Such was the rallying cry as Nolan Searles ('02), a.k.a. the infamously hilarious con man Moonface Martin, gets arrested on-stage while the audience enjoys a good laugh at his ridiculous antics. For such a simple action hours of blocking was needed in order to make the scene flow as smoothly as possible.

As she closes out the last note of "Blow, Gabriel, Blow," Lyndsay Rancher ('02) as the charismatic Remo Sweeney finishes her showstopping number with a final exultant hail. The stunning finale combined the best of costumes, lighting and musical finesse, resulting in a dazzling display of talent.

SPRING SHOW STAGE CREW: Yasin Al-Sayyad, Neel Cohen, Keith Davis, David Deitch, Matt Devine, Matt Dorori, Keith Erickson, Jared Goldstein, Gregg Gramatges, Marc Gramatges, Laura Griffin, Owen Hoxie, Aaron Inver, Dara Kates, Shaan Kessler, Boris Lau, Matt Lauts, John Li, Jason Lih, Graham Livingstone, Kristen Luchtmann, Tasha Lutek, Iram Malik, Colleen Martin, Kristen Merlino, Troy Mohamed, Sarah Moore, Kate O'Brien, Rachael Oppenheim, Ameetha Palanivel, Heather Parker, Nicole Pulito, Matt Rosenberg, John Ryan, Kyle Sattin, Jonathon Schimpf, Jeremy Smith, Jean Sung, Dominique Szarejczyk, Akhila Vasthara, R. Lights, music .... disclaimer? A disclaimer?? Indeed, something unusual happened before each performance of the spring show this year. In addition to welcoming the audience to the performance, Mr. Nation added a short preface about the stereotypes that the audience was about to see portrayed in Anything Goes, a popular Cole Porter musical comedy. The disclaimer was added as part of a slight revising of the musical because of the prevalence of racial stereotypes in the play. Initially, some controversy broke out when some members of the pit orchestra saw the mocking caricatures of two of the Chinese characters in the play. Even though it was intended by the original scriptwriters as pure comedic relief, some of the material was nonetheless offensive to students. Symbol Lai ('02), an actress who portrayed one of the Chinese “converts” said, “In the beginning, even I was offended at what kind of a character I had to portray.” That, however, did not prevent her and the rest of the cast from seeing the big picture. Several parts of the play were edited out and the disclaimer was added in to make the production less prejudicial while still keeping to the original script. The rest of the cast and crew as well as the pit orchestra continued to do their best. “Basically, I decided that if I was going to do this, I would do my absolute best and not ruin it for everyone just because initially I thought some of the material was racist,” Lai said.
When performing, timing and positioning must be precise in order to present unity. Jeremy Vollman ('01) said, "The most difficult part of a marching band is not playing the music but staying synchronized." The key to a good marching band is good formation, good music, and everything done in unison.

To make the music heard and rile up spirit, re-enforcement is needed. Courtney Cox ('03), Sarah Bleakin ('02), and Terri Carter ('03), provide the tempo by playing the bass drum. Rhythm is crucial to Marching Band.

MARCHING BAND: Lisa Akinsekas, Dave Anderson, Adam Barsky (Percussion Captain), Naomi Baumgarter, Dan Berg (Woodwind Captain), Jordan Berg, Jacklyn Bell (Drum Major), Andrew Bleaken, Sarah Bleaken, Brian Caballo, Terri Carter, Andrea Cotto, Courtney Cox, Sarah Daly, Kim D’Imperio, Polly Ehrlich, Adam Fenselh, (Brass Captain), Amanda Fabiane, David Firestein, James Gillespie, Rebecca Gillespie, Justin Gordon, Adam Green, Anthony Kasinskas, Kristina Kasinskas, Ashley Kelly, Megan Kelly, Ahmi Kim, Hannah Kim, Billy Klein, Lauren Marrone, Robert Natelson, Jill Pahre, Leah Plimpton, Asher Rose, Jennifer Tan, Jeremy Volkman, David Wolbach (Drum Major) COLOR GUARD: Alice Hon, Jamie Johnson, Danit Macor, Lauren Mennes, Heather Sabatino, Emily Saudail (Captain), Meenakshi Tripathi, Andy Moldoff (Manager), Heather Tomar (Manager), Lauren Tyska (Manager) Advisor: Mr. Yurko, Mr. Keister, Mr. Lacy.
Together We Stand...

The rumble of drums, the blare of horns, the chirp of flutes, the wave of flags all these elements uniquely characterize Marching Band. Musicians performers of all kinds unite to form this unique group. They come together from organizations such as Wind Ensemble, Symphonic Band, Freshman Wind Ensemble, Orchestra, and dance groups to provide the percussion, brass and woodwind sections, as well as the leading drum majors and the color guard.

Alone, they are individual performers with different musical backgrounds. Different genres and musical styles separate them. Only together do they form the marching band.

East's Marching Band performs partly to extract spirit from all the fans who attend the football games, and also for the sheer joy of performing. To perform as well as they do, however, requires a tremendous amount of time and hard work. All the members make time to practice every day outside in front of school. In addition to practicing the music, they must also orchestrate the dance and movement of the performance.

The different sections of the band occasionally practice separately. However, they always come together when it is game time. The dedication and talent of all the members of Marching Band truly shine in their performance.

David Wolbach ('00) said, "Hard work and dedication seem impossible at first, but really pay off in the end."

David Wolbach ('00), one of two Drum Majors, salutes in order to signal the band to begin playing. "The position of Drum Major is a lot of responsibility, which I take very seriously." Poise, flair, and dedication characterize a drum major.

Jackie Bell ('00), A Drum Major, leads the band as they march out towards the field at full attention. She said, "After committing four years to marching band, I am very proud of what I have become and have had a great time leading this group."
After the first few months, however, East had already taught us more than just math and grammar. A new sensation of independence developed and protected us gradually as we walked the halls. We knew our locker routines by heart. We knew every inch of the hallways. And we had begun to realize just what high school was all about - ourselves.

When the clock strikes 2:25, East students scatter. Some rush off to soccer practice; others saunter to their cars; while another group of students, the freshmen, gather in cafeteria I just to hang out after school. Sound strange?

Actually, the tradition of cafeteria culture has thrived over the years. Each incoming class brings in a new generation of students eager to meet the great acquaintances; new friends and old buddies at the place they affectionately call “the Caf.” Whether students are helping each other with their homework or just chatting about the latest movie, East’s cafeteria definitely has a unique world of its own at 2:30 each day.

After all, cafeteria I has all the amenities: readily available (though not always) junk food, an ice cream machine, soda, and the special ambience that only the freshman can create. For those who are still exploring East, staying after school is a good way to begin. The diversity of students who go in and out of the work double doors give the cafeteria it variety - it is the Grand Central Station of East.

Just because the school day ends, it does not mean that freshmen head home. Many of them stay after to take advantage of the endless “buffet” of activities East has to offer. Others, like Lisa Browne (’03) and Jen Strouse (’03) have a friendly chat after school before heading to Caf 1 just to hang out with their friends.

East's Buffet

For much of this year, the freshmen have been introduced to East's buffet of activities. There are more than enough clubs and organizations to cater to a variety of different interests, whether they be athletic, artistic, or a multitude of others. A slew of culture-oriented clubs include Asian Cultural Society as well as Irish Culture Club, just to name a few. ACS, for example, holds meetings to help inform its members of the Asian culture, and welcomes students of all ethnic backgrounds to join in the fun. The Lunar Banquet provides a cultural lesson as well as an exotic display of various Asian cuisine — all served to the faculty. For students with athletic interest, they can choose from a variety of sports ranging from bowling to baseball. The Art Club as well as Craft Club are two new organizations that work on various creative projects in and around the school. Diana To '03 said, "I like the variety of clubs and activities at East because it's more than what we had at Beck. I can explore all my different interests and I also made a lot of new friends."

Makehi Tripathi '03 and other members of the art club paint away on the walls in Cafeteria I. During the course of the school year, the art club has been responsible for beautifying and bettering East, by painting murals on the walls in the hallways, the DiBart gym, and the bathrooms.
It's the big leagues now. Swim fast and watch your back. This school can swallow you whole. Freshman year was only the first step. Life will twist and turn in every direction socially, academically, and emotionally. You'll love some minutes of it, hate other ones, and sometimes feel like you're just going through the motions. But in the end, you'll look back on it all with a moist eye, wishing you could take some of it with you into the future.
WARNING: STRESS AHEAD

It is every student's nightmare: it's one o'clock in the morning, and you still have to write that essay due the next day, study for the big Chemistry test and finish some math homework. Juniors and seniors may have adjusted well to the hectic schedule, but for sophomores just emerging from freshman year, it can be a rude awakening.

For many students, sophomore year is always a far cry from the laid-back, easygoing style of freshman year classes. For some reason, the teachers just seem to get much stricter come tenth grade. Sure, they say it is good preparation for the real world, but for many sophomores still grappling with the onslaught of work, the experience can be very stressful.

Aside from the myths, however, the adjustment period is relatively painless - if one knows how to manage time, that is. For a student, constantly juggling activities, school and a social life requires organization and balance, all invaluable skills to have for the present and the future.

Sophomore year brings a lot of change for all students and alters their attitude toward school work. They can no longer take it as easy as they did the year before. Now, as sophomores, they must work till the last minute. Here, Jaimee Phillips ('02) and Anette Gabay ('02) are getting in some last minute studying before their test.

A Dance To Remember

After the flurry of their Freshman Dance, many would-be sophomores set their sights upon the Sophomore Cotillion. Months of planning and hard work go into choosing a theme, setting up the decorations and picking the right songs to make Cotillion truly a night to remember for all who attend. As in all events, some students were a bit disappointed by various aspects of the dance—Sophia Wang ('02), for example, said that there could have been improvements with the music. "The music could have been better had they not played songs from the seventies and eighties," Wang said. Still, though, many students came away from the dance with new memories of a wonderful night. The decorations, in part, helped enhance the mood of a dance to remember. "SGA did an awesome job with decorations. It truly was an unforgettable night for all of us," said Priti Ojha ('02).

Rachel Wu ('02), Josh Rissmiller ('02), and Jen Ing ('02) mingle with their senior dates to the Cotillion. Andrew Kim, Vicki Chou, and Jeff Wang. Although the Cotillion is a sophomore dance, many upperclassmen attend. "They are more experienced at having fun at these dances," said Wu, "and plus, they can drive."
Does It Ever End?

Ah, it is that time of year again. For many East students, junior year holds many new beginnings as well as stressful events. Everything from the PSATs to the Junior Prom happens during the course of two semesters, and balancing it all out takes some serious skill. After weathering through sophomore year, many juniors have to cope with the continued difficulty of their classes. Additionally, however, the pressures stretch far beyond the classroom.

With many students turning seventeen, the race is on to see who gets their driver’s license first, and who will be first to stop taking the big yellow limousine to school. Academically, juniors begin their initial college search process; and even though senior year looms in the distance, time ticks quicker than many realize.

For many, adjusting to the accelerated speed of school and their own personal development takes some getting used to. So how do students cope? For some juniors, a healthy dose of friendship seems to do the trick. Studying with friends or just plain venting frustrations helps juniors to maintain their sanity when the stress gets bad.

For juniors, even after hours of studying, classes are never a breeze. From taking good notes to participating, they are constantly worrying about their next move. After cramming all night, Kenny Ensign ('01), races against time to finish his math test to the best of his ability.

Seventeen Years In Waiting

It's that time of year again. Time to clear the road and run for your lives. A junior is getting his driver's license.

As much as they are the butt of jokes by seniors and adults, the juniors who have earned the right to drive have earned it fairly and deservedly. They have had the proper number of hours of classroom instruction, and have survived the intolerable driving lessons with a total stranger. According to state law, they are now prepared to face the realities of modern driving.

"Sure, there's danger and road rage aplenty," said Pete Medina ('01), a junior recently endowed with that fatal piece of paper. "But you just have to keep your head attached and you can live through it easily."

Medina is right. The most important thing a new driver can bring to the road is his or her own focus and attention: to traffic laws, other drivers, and road hazards.

Towards the end of the year, the parking lot fills up more and more to maximum capacity, with juniors embracing their newfound ability - and responsibility. But it's an honor that they have earned - and, with a little bit of sense, one they will be able to keep.

As scary as it may be, juniors, like Ann Kraft ('01), are getting their licenses. After seventeen years, they are finally enjoying their freedom.

What was a good way to relieve stress?

"I love to play my guitar whenever I'm stressed. But hanging out with my friends helps too." - Michael Fleming ('01)

"The two things that help me relieve stress the most are running and playing basketball. Sometimes listening to music helps too." - Rachel Gordon ('01)

"Although playing tennis for school is great, I like to go to the gym to work out as often as I can. This helps me relieve pressure and stress." - Ian Richman ('01)

"When I'm stressed, I usually exercise. But I sometimes try to write things down to get them off my head. Hanging out with friends is good too." - Ben Ruder ('01)

"When I have things on my mind, I usually listen to soothing music. I also exercise to clear all my thoughts." - Sarah Boyer ('01)

"I don't really have many hobbies, but to relieve stress I usually listen to music or hang out with friends, and occasionally stop by the gym." - Lindsay Strug ('01)

They say that senior year is full of memories of a lifetime. One's own personal car, newly printed driver's licenses — all of the perks that come with seniority truly live up to the hype. Only problem is — most of the fun requires something else — money. So — what is the solution? An after school job, of course, is the answer for many seniors. Traditionally, the burger-flipping hobby has been many students' pastimes ever since the days of diners and puddle skirts. Times change, but teenage motivations have not. As many students attest, the number one reason that they choose to take on an extra responsibility is for the money. However, besides for a regular payday, part time jobs teach important values as well. "Learning interdependence from your parents and proving to yourself that you can survive in the real world are key skills you learn from working," Jay Kothari ('00) said. While there are some students who need to work to support their families, the majority of East students work to pay for personal expenses — tabs include a shopping spree every once in a while, or a night out on the town with friends. All of the costs add up, and the bill is often expensive. "Besides working in the school store, I also find time outside of school to work as a hostess at the Elena Wu Restaurant," Katie Pease ('00) said.

Because senior year is supposedly the easiest, many wonder why the upperclassmen choose to increase their workload. Cons do exist, however. Pocco Jimenez ('00) said, "It's boring, sometimes monotonous, but it's always worth the money." Despite some setbacks, jobs teach valuable lessons — priceless to any student.

It is a popular myth: high schools all have their own seniority system. At times, some upperclassmen may forget that they were once underclassmen as well, causing hostility. Nowadays, at East, the differences between the upper and lower classes are not as great, and many lasting friendships are formed between them. And, thankfully, myths have become myths, and East fosters a friendly social environment for all students, be they freshmen or seniors.

"Because of my experience maintaining friendships with upperclassmen while I was an underclassman, it gives me satisfaction to know that underclassmen appreciate my friendship that much," said Laurie Burton ('01).

While some upperclassmen won’t associate with the underclassmen, others will be found joking, laughing and having fun with them, in and outside of the classroom. In many electives at East, the students work together to create music, a cake or just to solve a common problem. After school, teamwork is a key factor in each sporting event and the mutual need to win better our team. Teamwork knows no age boundaries.

"Some underclassmen grew up in my neighborhood, so I have known them for many years. Others are just cool people. I met some underclassmen in clubs, and other I met in my music class, which consists of sophomores, juniors and seniors," said Dave Firestein ('01).

For many East students like Burton, having friends of different ages benefits them for all four years at East. Not only does it introduce them to diverse perspectives on everything from the gossip to life, but it also prepares them for the real world — a place full of different people.

Standardized Test Checklist

[] 1. lots of #2 pencils
[] 2. 2 alarm clocks, just in case
[] 3. coffee, because no one should be conscious this early
[] 4. Kaplan Vocab cards, because the test doesn’t begin until the proctor says go
[] 5. 35 cents
[] 6. 2 packs of tissues ..... one for yourself and one for the sniffing, coughing, wheezing person behind you
[] 7. Pajamas and/or sweats for pure comfort
[] 8. A nice fat eraser ... for those stubborn pencil marks
[] 9. Your third grade calculator, because long division shouldn’t take that long ...
[] 10. A good luck charm with a consistent track record
[] 11. DO EVERY PROBLEM!!
Frantic students armed with caffeine surround themselves with books, notebooks, index cards, and study guides before school in the cafeterias, desperately trying to remember the details of the chapter that they meant to finish studying the night before. Others, comatose, sleepwalk through the halls until they can hand in the paper they worked on until the wee hours of the morning. Whether bogged down by procrastination, over scheduling, or both, students at East suffer from a severe case of time deprivation.

For some, the sheer number of after school activities combined with part-time jobs leaves them little time for the ever-increasing workload. Thus, most students sacrifice sleep, for important assignments. Genevieve La Ferriere ('00), a busy senior enrolled in several honors classes, says, “I usually sacrifice sleep, but eventually everything works out.”

Be it the seasoned senior or the inexperienced freshman, many East students struggle to balance school and activities. Emily Saidel ('01) suggests that “Schools should only be held on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays because the reduced schedule would alleviate some of the stress that students suffer from.” However, until scientists devise a way to prolong the twenty-four hour day, East’s busy students will continue to learn the most popular sport of all: juggling.
During their four years at East, students find the time to get involved in everything. In addition to academics, students dive head first into sports, music, drama, clubs, and organizations. But the truly rare individual is the well-rounded student - one who can sincerely participate in a wide variety of activities, while simultaneously demonstrating equal commitment and participation. It takes a lot of time, a lot of talent, and a lot of guts to be able to balance it all out.

While some students believe that activities are just a vital necessity for college applications, many join activities for what they really offer. A well-rounded student, then, fits this description. "To be the well-rounded student, you need to acknowledge that there is something more to life than just a rat race for college," said Yusra Al-Sayyad ('00). "The kid concerned only with the grades will obviously never become well-rounded."

Additionally, East, like any school, has social divisions - we call them "cliques." But well-rounded students are able to transcend these rifts and still retain their individuality. "When you do the same things, you have more of a tendency to live and breathe the same 'life' for periods of time," said Arin Sang-Urai ('01). "Of course, when you are a part of many things, activities, and organizations, you can have a profound effect on what other people think of you, and on how you view yourself."

Perhaps the most important aspect of being well-rounded consists of giving back some of what one takes away from East. It means sharing with others the knowledge and experience one acquires through different activities. Only by sharing can a student possibly achieve balance.
The car’s got a full tank of gas. There’s a big party at a beach house this weekend. Senior cut day is coming up. Life is good. It’s senior year! Teachers have assigned big projects in some of your classes. You have daily homework in the others. And after school there’s work for three hours. On top of all that, your parents are yelling for you to finish college apps. Life is bad. It’s senior year. Underclassmen always talk in high expectations of the loose, relaxed senior year. Seniors know the truth: that year never comes. There’s always something else to do, and if there isn’t, you could always worry about things you already did. There’s that big lab report handed in last week that made no sense and was done in size 10 Bic blue font. Then there’s that pop quiz on some 300 page book that you never even opened and whose Cliffsnotes® were sold out. And then there’s the long wait for the little white envelopes from the colleges. And then there’s that other thing ... and ... and ...
You've served your time, and you've worked for your freedom. With college around the corner, life is sweet. The world opens whole new opportunities and a car provides adequate and reliable liberation. Parties become more and more frequent, and for the first time ever, you're no longer trapped inside your house wondering how much fun you could be having. Senior year lives up to everything that you expected. You strut down the halls of East with the understanding that you are older, taller and wiser than the other kids. The only words that enter your head are "Relax, it's about time you relax."

Senior year is one last year to party with your friends and one last year to do what you want before college. Most importantly, senior year is one last year to create some of the best memories of your life.

Shepherds Of East

To my friends in the Class of 2000:
We have spent four eventful years together. During that time I have been fortunate to have the opportunity to participate in your education and you have made a significant impact on my life.
As you prepare to take your place in the world, my thoughts and prayers will be with you.
"May the Lord Bless You and Keep You
The Lord Lift His countenance upon you and give you peace.
May the Lord make His face shine upon you and be gracious unto you."
Leonard Terranova
Assistant Principal
Class of 2000
"In looking back over the last few year, it is hard to imagine a class which has impacted East as you have. Both as individuals, teams, and collectively as a class, you have set a standard by which other classes will be measured.
Four years from now, many of you will be graduated from college, other will already have established themselves in the "REAL WORLD" I would hope that some of the success you experience had its origins at East. I wish every member of the Class of 2000 the best that the future has to offer.
Mr. James Gallagher
Principal

As the elected leaders of the class, Neil Syal ('00), Lauren Marlowe ('00), Rachel Wenger ('00), Roma Pandya ('00), and Andrew Keller ('00) have been responsible for staging the landmark events of the senior class. Vice-President Marlowe remarks, "As officers we have tried our best to bring the class together. It has truly been enjoyable to lead the class through four memorable years."
Together, with the assistance of the SGA representatives, the class of 2000 has truly had an unforgettable experience.

After four great years at Cherry Hill High School East, I moved down south to attend Duke University. Contrary to northern beliefs, the Blue Devils were very accepting of my vegetarian and "60's garb" lifestyle. They even borrowed my Oberon, King of the Fairies, outfit for various fraternity parties. While retrieving my wings I was re-introduced to the evils of coconut rum and gambling, a bad mix with academics. I just barely made it into medical school, but my life turned around when I met my wife, a veterinary student, at an animal rights protest.
Together we studied diligently and graduated with honors. Within a few years, we opened our own clinic, "You and Your Dog," where man and man's best friend could bond together in medical nirvana. Having worked hard and earned enough to support a comfortable lifestyle, we decided to start a family. Now, at the young age of eighty, the entire Barmach clan is in the business. My son has followed in my footsteps and has become a human doctor. My daughter has become an animal doctor. And my grandson, who is a bit strange, has become the lawn doctor.

After college, I was recruited by NASA to work on the mission to Mars. I successfully engineered a Mars shuttle and lander. My career took an exciting turn when NASA temporarily joined with the CIA to create a space defense network. After the project, I, specializing in space technology espionage, became a field agent for the CIA. I escaped death during countless battles in exotic locations against SPECTRE, an international organization of criminal masterminds.
After turning forty, I left the CIA to start an aerospace design company and settle down with my family.
At fifty-five, after making a fortune with my company, I retired with my wife to a secluded Northern California home.

As a man of many years,
possessing experience and fear, I look toward my faded memories and search for those moments lost long ago. Forced through time in my early life, I felt the need to catch up with the pace by improving myself and my environment. As my body wore, my mind strengthened. I realized that the fourth dimension did not control me as long as I recognized my own weaknesses. Now in full control of my life I do not wrestle with a purpose nor with an ultimate truth, but exist in harmony with my goals past and future. Over the years I have lost and gained but I have always retained my insatiable hunger to create something remarkable.
Those who knew me in my youth understood my goal of one day touching all of those around me, even those I would never meet. I do not know who is to judge my performance, or when I will receive a score, but I do know that the most difficult task was to keep moving, and continue my path.

During the past ninety years I have successfully taken part in the relentless pursuit of perfection. After sixty great years of selling hot dogs at the corner of 9th and Market in Philly, I had finally reached my goal. No one could make a fully loaded hot dog as well as I could. After spreading relish and sauerkraut on the sides of the frankfurter, I would then carefully swirl the mustard on top. This job was very lucrative, and with the tips I received for making such great snacks I was able to live comfortable in my minivan. Eventually the frankfurter business became monotonous, so I decided to spice up my life by risking my life savings by betting on a thoroughbred horse race. Having expertly studied the handicaps, I bet a correct trifecta and was able to retire in Florida with the prize money. Currently, I spend most of my leisure time playing the piano.

As I approach the end of this fantastic ride known as life, I hope that my existence has mattered to people other than myself. My greatest fear is that I have wasted my years on this planet, although I know in my heart that I have tried to make the most out of them. Every day for nearly a century I have made decisions, and now I question those decisions. Did I choose the right career? Did I live up to my potential? Did I make a positive impact on the lives of others? Do I have any regrets? I suppose I know the answers to those questions, since every day I have had a smile on my face and I have tried my hardest to make a difference. I am comforted knowing that no matter what the results, I have always given everything I have in order to reach my goals. My life was not a waste, and I am happy. Now, the only thing left to do is to open my mouth wide in a giant smile, put my arms above my head, and enjoy the rest of the ride.

Slowly but surely we neared the end. We arrived intact but not unscathed from the trials we had faced. It was never easy, as new challenges constantly surfaced and old ones came to haunt us. But, in the end, we survived. And as we looked around we felt the pride coursing through our veins, for when all was said and done we were the last ones standing.

Lauren Marlowe ('00) is competitive both on the tennis court and in the classroom. The one-on-one game setup fuels the pressure to win. Often, the tension during key points of a singles or doubles game can make the players nervous—but when it comes down to it, the seasoned players like Marlowe know when to focus on each play as it comes.

The need to win must be in every player’s heart if a team wants to win. Each player must back each other and do their best before, during, and after games. Kyle Dallas ('00) of the boy’s varsity soccer team focuses sharply as he prepares to shoot the ball to the goal—in this game, every second counts.
Soccer is a game of fast footwork. Each kick has to be well placed, each player in his position-ready for the rumble. As Jake Rosenberg ('00) comes up behind his teammate Jay Joyce ('00), he ensures that his team has the ball. "We all push hard to make sure that we win every possible point—that's just how we train," Joyce said.

Holly Brownstein ('00) is a player who realizes that every shot counts in a match, and plays with this in mind. With good hand and eye coordination and well-developed skill, the player creates a successful shot, and pushes the team one step closer to victory.

Girl's Tennis: Group IV South Jersey Champs, Group IV State Finalist, League Champs, Sectional Champs, First Team All Conference—Nadine Ginsburg ('00), Lauren Marlowe ('00), Jenny Chang ('00), Cathy Richter ('03); Second Team All Conference—Sam Schaffer ('03) ...

Boy's Soccer: Highlights—1-0 win over Shawnee in regular season and in second round of Coaches' Tournament; Jay Joyce ('00)—Second Team All South Jersey, First Team Olympic Conference, First Team Group IV; John Mozzillo ('00)—Third Team All South Jersey, First Team Olympic Conference, First Team Group IV ... Girls' Volleyball: Highlights—Champions of East Brunswick Bears' Invitational, Third Place in Viking Invitational; Captains—Vicki Mullin, Annie Chang, Joy Pela, Melissa Barto; First Team All Conference—Melissa Barto ('00), Annie Chang ('00); Second Team All Conference—Joy Pela ('00), Neesha Shah ('01); Team Honors—MVPs: Annie Chang ('00), Melissa Barto ('00); Most Improved Player: Sarah Goldberg ('01); Rookies of the Year: Jhane Zaraghami ('02), Meredith Minoff ('02); Coaches' Award: Inna Fabrikant ('01); Offensive Player of the Year: Neesha Shah ('01); Defense Player of the Year: Joy Pela ('00).

Joy Pela ('00) blocks a hit. For the girls' volleyball team, time is of the essence. Intense scrutiny is put into the flaws of each player to gradually perfect them over time. "Every time we play, we feel our problems, and we work to correct them," said Neesha Shah ('01).

Samantha Shaffer ('03) prepares to unleash a serve. Freshman players have less pressure to win, because they are still in the learning process. Nevertheless, time and practice are what turn freshmen into varsity competitors, and for the few freshmen who make varsity teams, they learn how to deal with this pressure early on.

Intently focused on the game before them, soccer players anxiously await a goal, to swing the odds of the game their way. These varsity players have put their heart and soul into the game, and hold high hopes for victory. In the end, however, waiting can sometimes prove more difficult than actual playing, as these players demonstrate.

For East's girls' volleyball team, time is as precious as points in the games. Serve after serve, Neesha Shah ('01), a Varsity volleyball player, often practices until 5:30 after school. The goal: to win the next game no matter what—and that lofty goal produces pressure on each team member to deliver.
Think fast! When the blitzing player charges, a quarterback has little time to react. There may not be enough time to carefully calculate an accurate pass. In this case, it's up to the receiver to compensate and make the catch.

Running long distances doesn't have to be painful, especially when one is not alone. Both Agner ('00) and Arianna Cohen ('00) smile as they return from a long, liberating jog. Agner said, "For me, running is a way to release stress and also keep in shape." For Agner, running develops her mental discipline—a valuable skill for any situation in life.

Girls’ Soccer: Marissa Kravitz ('00): Second Team (Line) Olympic Conference; Jennifer Padlo ('00): First Team (Back) Olympic Conference; Meredith Soble ('00): First Team (Midfield) Olympic Conference; Rachel Sterling ('00): Second Team (Back) Olympic Conference... Football: Second Team Offense-Receivers: Brendon Borowski ('01), Jason Silver ('00), Offensive Line: Scott Van De Rijn ('00), Running Back: Sam Watson ('01), Second Team Defense-Linebacker: Jake Stein ('00), Defensive Back: Joe Cucinotti ('01)...

Girl’s Cross-Country: Highlights—broke five year losing streak with victory over Highland, placed 13th at Sectionals; Allison Vento ('00): All Conference & All South Jersey Group IV (two years in a row).
Marissa Kravitz ('00) lines up a shot on goal. Shooting requires precision and accuracy in equal doses, but it also requires a powerful force of energy on the shooter’s part. Kravitz, who has played soccer all four years at East, said, “When I’m in a game, I need to be focused to make the best shot and play my best.”

Allison Venuto ('00) perseveres as she heads for a lengthy run. A talented member of East’s girls’ cross-country team, Venuto has physical and emotional strength: “Right before the meet, it is crucial to keep your head calm and to focus on the race ahead.”

Members of East’s football team raise their helmets as a cheering salute of team spirit before a game. Time-honored traditions hold a high place in sports teams, and contribute to the unity and focus of team members.

Once the goalie sees the ball headed her way, she must stop it using any means, possible or impossible. In this game, split-second strategies need to combine with a steady mental focus in order to deter the opponent.

Against all odds, the football player has to keep standing, and—more importantly—keep moving. The eyes of the offense are always on the goal line. Player must have their head in the game to keep focused despite setbacks. In football, the field is a mental and physical maze, which needs to be negotiated skillfully to reach the goal of
Sacrifice For Success

A killer work ethic defines the motto of East's athletic teams. While other East students go home after school, cross-country team member Andy Lui ('01) spends his hours preparing for the next meet. Lui said, "Even though it's a lot of hard work, that unique glory of victory makes it all worth it in the end."

Even during practice, cheerleaders put their all into every routine. Be it Varsity or J.V., they work hard to let their school spirit shine through. East cheerleaders not only give an "E" for effort, but also a "P" for perseverance.

Girl's Field Hockey: Highlights—With hard work came our first win against Paul VI, dominated both games in two ties against West, come from behind win against Pennsauken, played one of our best games ever against Eastern; Second Team All Conference—Beth Habina ('00), Renee Desrochers ('00), Jane Cabalo ('00), Lauren Meier ('01)—four goals; Iris Goldstein ('01)—three goals/two assists; Beth Habina ('00) — three goals/one assist; Deanna Dibruno ('00) — two goals/one assist; Managers: Michelle Fanelle, Katie Kelly, Sheena Marston ....
Boys Cross-Country: Highlights—Won their first meet in four years; invitational meet medal winners—David Koslow ('03), Dave Gelfand ('01), Rob Koslow ('01), Alan Leff ('01), Andy Lui ('01), Mike Nagelberg ('01), and Karthik Nune ('01).

Allison Nanni ('00) cheers on with school spirit at a football game. Dressed from head to toe in school colors, she practices hard after school in order to bring the unique and crowd-pleasing routines to each game.
(00) runs toward new goals as the boy's cross country team prepares for their fall season. Fineburg, like many other teammates on the team, spends his extra-curricular hours running today, in shape for upcoming meets. In the world of athletics, slowing down even once will interrupt the cycle of health. Perseverance is key to top performance.

Like any other sport, cheerleading requires time spent on stretching, warming up and practicing. As always, the goal is perfection: to display school spirit and make it look fantastic. Heather Butler ('02), along with the rest of the cheerleading squad, prepares to wow the crowd with another e-x-c-e-l-l-e-n-t cheer.

Chasing tenaciously after the ball for victory, Joanne Ilustre ('00) dashes full speed ahead toward the goal. Grueling practices after school accounts for many of Ilustre's skillful moves on the field. "It's all about work, work and more work if you want to excel at field hockey," Ilustre said.

Ready... hike! Once the ball has been snapped and the play has begun, confusion ensues almost immediately. Players are piled atop players, and mixed grunts and shouts are heard. In the end, one man come out on top ball in hand, to run towards victory.

Nadine Ginsburg ('00) prepares herself mentally and physically for a serve. Tennis, like many sports, taxes the mind as well as the body. Players must conjure where they want the ball to land, and how it is going to make it get there.

Rachel Gordon ('01) and Leigh Cohen ('01) return home after a long slow practice run. Part of the emphasis of cross-country running is the importance of teamwork. Although running a race is an individual accomplishment, unity and cooperation is what contributes to the overall success of the team.
Annie Chang ('00) leaps and delivers a treacherous slam while her coach looks on. Volleyball is a fast-moving game of action and reflexes. This is obviously not your elementary school gym class volleyball...these players practice incessantly. According to Chang, skill comes only with practice.

John Mozzilo ('00) takes a quick turn to obtain possession of the ball. Soccer players never remain in place for long; they must follow the erratic movement of the ball from one end of the field to the other. The possession of the ball is constantly alternating, without any rest for the players.

Alan Leff ('01) paces himself to finish off his warm-up run. Cross country runners seldom receive a break; each day's practice serves a different purpose. Every practice is a demanding extraction of talent and endurance.

Another close encounter takes place as the ball is sent flying into the path of the goalkeeper. Defense is one of the most important duties in soccer, and one of the most challenging, but Jen Padlo ('00) is up to the task. Things often happen quickly and unexpectedly, and the defense must be able to deal with sudden changes in plans.

Beth Habina ('00) dashes after an escaping ball at a home field hockey game. The key to success in field hockey is never to let the ball get away. This requires both a careful set of eyes and a focused mind.
Team Steam

Girl's Basketball: Highlights — wins over Cherokee, Shawnee, Eastern, and Holy Cross, advanced to the finals of the Washington Twp. Holiday Tournament, Joy Pela ('00) became the third East player to score 1000 points in her high school career; Second Team All Conference and Conference All Star Team — Joy Pela ('00), Jhane Zarnani ('02); Conference All Senior Game — Joy Pela ('00), Lauren Marlowe ('00)...

Boy's Swimming: Highlights — finished second in the state with 22 of 28 swimmers scoring at least a point in the state championship meet, won South Jersey Boy's League, South Jersey Sectional Champs, won South Jersey Relays, won St. Joseph's Relays, beat Shawnee for the first time in 14 years; Captain — Adam Bussey ('00), Dan Kent ('00)...

Winter Track: Team placed well at both varsity and junior varsity levels; Highlights — Neel Desai ('00) placed fourth in long jump at SJTCA meet, Sprint Medley of Allison Venuto ('00), Nicole Thurston ('01), Sue Caruso ('01), and Ashley Perkins ('03) placed second in SJTCA meet. Rick Apgar ('02) placed third in the 400m dash, Dave Koslow ('03) placed fifth in the 1600m run, Kelli Mayo ('03) placed fifth in the 800m run.

Racing against the clock as the freestyle competition surges on, Matt Acciani ('02) keeps his mind focused on the importance of consistency. In the competitive arena of varsity swimming, consistency in individual performance is what keeps the team afloat in the final tally. Dave Lawrence ('00), one of Acciani's teammates, said, "We placed second in states because of how well we all came together as a team in the moments that counted — it was an accomplishment built by layers of hard work and talent."

Veering to avoid an opponent's attempted steal, Lauren Marlowe ('00) concentrates on making the pass to another team member. In the game against West, Marlowe and her teammates played a close game and stayed together from beginning to end. Strategy centered mainly upon taking advantage of every team member's strengths and balancing out weaknesses, Marlowe said. "All season long we had worked hard to develop our strength as a team, and in the game against West we gelled together to win."
Running on determination and carbs will get results, but add to that collective determination, and a winning strategy emerges. Andy Liu ('01) puts his focus into practice, but his eyes rest on more than just beating his own best time. “Practice is more than just striving for a personal goal; it’s about seeing your goals as an important part of the overall team goals,” Liu said.

And they’re off! The piercing buzz of the starter bell signals the beginning of competition where East’s Kevin Klimas ('02), Johnny Wang ('00), and Andrew Townsend ('00) combine their efforts toward the swim for victory. Form follows function as the three teammates glide into the water with one united goal: do only the best. “All of our hard work would have meant nothing if we didn’t balance each other out so well — our team’s cooperation and friendship over what else had a joy Pela ('00) leaps for a three-pointer during a critical point in the game between East and West. Pela knows, however, that her talents on the court are not enough to lead the team to victory. Being a team player was what ultimately led the girl’s varsity basketball team to a rewarding season.
Leaders And Bleeders

Girl’s Swimming: Highlights — first team in East athletic history to win four consecutive state championships, won South Jersey Girl’s League, South Jersey Sectional Champs, won Coaches Invitational Championship; Captains — Jackie Cona (‘00), Jayme Smith (‘00), Louise Shaw (‘00)— four years of swimming and four state championships ...

Wrestling: First Team All Conference — Bill Gragilla (‘00); Second Team All Conference-Blake Krevolin(‘00); District Place Winners and Regional Qualifiers — Bill Gragilla (‘00) ... Girl’s Bowling: First Team All Olympic-American Division — Jen Padlo (‘00), Lisa Reichenbacher (‘01); Captain — Jen Padlo (‘00) — her 170.5 average was the second highest average in school history.

Straining with the effort, Aaron Wiggins (‘00) puts all of his strength into the last few minutes of the match against Pennsauken in an attempt to keep his opponent in the ring. As a senior wrestler, Wiggins’ performance sets an example for the younger and less experienced wrestlers.

Lisa Reichenbacher (‘01) and her teammate confer with their coach, Mr. Vranich before taking their places in the competition. As a presence of leadership within the team, a coach both encourages and guides the players toward a higher standard.
Catherine Kolody ('02) surfaces to check her lane after a relay race — an act that represents her role as a role model to her team members. The swim team's unprecedented victory at the State Championships for the fourth consecutive year shows just how powerfully leadership can impact the entire team.

Smiling confidently into the lane, Jen Padlo ('00) executes a smooth stroke as her teammates watch on. Much like her bowling style, Padlo handles her role as anchor bowler on the varsity team with finesse. "Jen is a great leader and a tough competitor," said Jon Fustfield ('01), a teammate.

Setting an example for others requires extra effort and hard work, and John Gragilla ('00) completely immerses himself in his dedication to wrestling. The fact that younger, less experienced peers follow his example further motivates Gragilla to give it his all in every match.

Taking a brief break from the competitive atmosphere of a swim meet, Cathy German ('02) pauses to recap her performance with Mr. Sheppard, Coach of the varsity team. Coaches often rely on strong athletes to help push the team to the top while learning to be individual team leaders.

Jake Stein ('00) urges on his team and pumps up the crowd after winning a match. Stein's energetic charisma on and off the wrestling mat plays a key role in keeping the team vibrant and the team motivated.

Erica Weitz ('01) paces herself during a backstroke race while striving to beat her previous time. Her relentless motivation to improve upon her prior best serves as a collective motivation for her team members to strive towards higher goals as well.
CRITICAL MOMENTS

Boys' Bowling: Highlights — beat conference #1 Shawnee, Matt Robinson ('01) bowled a 277 which was the second highest game in school history; Second team Olympic Conference-American Division — Michael Mishkin ('00), Matt Robinson ('01); Captain — Micheal Mishkin ('00), a four year varsity bowler ...

Boy's Basketball: First Team All Conference — Marcus Bullock ('00), Matthew Minoff ('00). First Team All south Jersey — Marcus Bullock ('00); Honorable Mention All South Jersey — Matthew Minnoff ('00); First Team All Group IV — Marcus Bullock ('00); Second team All Group IV — Matthew Minnoff ('00); Honorable Mention All Group IV — Andy Schwartz ('01); Marcus Bullock ('00) joined the 1000 point club; team was ranked 4th in courier Post Top 20 Poll.

As the frames tick away, Elan Geffen ('03) and Matt Robinson ('01) look on intently as the numbers add up. When players aren't bowling, they keep a steady eye on their scores to determine their position in the flow of the competition.

Suddenly realizing that he needs to pass quickly to avert an attempted steal, Andy Schwartz ('01) frantically scans the court for an open teammate. In such intense moments of the game, a split-second decision makes all the difference.

Rachel Wenger ('00) puts all of her energy into the cheer as she rallies the boy's varsity basketball team after winning point. Moments of victory, however, are not the only occasions for cheering. The explosive power of the cheerleaders' routines often motivate the team to overcome downtime to regain the game.
All eyes in the crowd look up at Tina Ortega ('00) as she stands tall and cheers for victory. A well-choreographed cheer is the key to success, and although it has been practiced many times, concentration and focus must always remain constant in the face of pressure.

Lauri Silnitzer ('01) shows her enthusiasm as the contagious excitement of the game rises to a climax. Cheerleaders get just as vigorous a workout as the athletes that they motivate, both from the mental as well as the physical energy rush.

Teammates gather as Michael Mishkin ('00) flawlessly releases a ball into the lane. While bowling may not seem as physically intense as some other sports, it is nevertheless a sport that requires intense mental focus in order to succeed.

Kwame Biney ('00) fearlessly plunges downcourt as his opponents attempt to block his shot. In the critical moments of a game, one must let go of all reservations in order to set loose the power of competition in all its uninhibited intensity.

BOY'S BASKETBALL: Andy Schwartz, Karim Farhat, Marcus Bullock, Randy Shapiro, Andrew Inselman, Jason Mitchell, Roberto West, Jeffrey Mooney, Matthew Minoz, John Enny, Tim Roche, Ryan Ormsby, Scott Rinehart, Kwame Biney, Lev Kreymer, Mr. Reuben (asst. coach), Mr. Valore (coach).

BOY'S BOWLING: Herbert Fishman, Jonathan Fusfield, Elan Geflen, Joshua Harris, Michael Mishkin, David Reisner, Matt Robinson, Mr. Vranich (coach).

Breathe in, breathe out. Kelley Perkins ('00) relaxes as she runs the laps during cross-country practice. For Perkins, running is not only a way to work out, but also a method to unwind and let her mind run free of school's pressures. "It's a hard workout but sometimes, running helps me deal with stress," said Perkins.

Keeping his eye on the pass, Marcus Bullock ('00) uses his footwork to avoid the attempted steal. In a game as strategic as basketball, Brown does not automatically mean victory. Bullock said: "The mental part of the game is more important than the physical part because as long as you know your strategy, it can get you through anything.

For Jayme Smith ('00), co-captain of the varsity girl's swimming team, dedication and competitiveness go together. Rachelle Wander ('02), a member of the team, said, "Both Jackie and Jayme are dedicated swimmers who are used to winning." Indeed, the girl's varsity team lived up to those standards by winning its fourth consecutive state Championship title.

The tension mounts as Chris Mermer ('00) attempts to break free of an opponent's hold. "When you're on the mat, a thousand things can go through your head — but one thing is the only thing that counts — and that is escape," Mermer said.

Ryan Shore ('03) races against the clock in a regional swim meet. As an athlete, Shore must be both physically as well as mentally prepared - and dealing with pressure is crucial. Shore said, "I just stay calm and concentrate by zoning out any distractions."

While some go to the gym to let out their tensions, Jon Fusfield ('01) chooses to take aim at his frustrations with one smooth stroke down the lane. Fusfield, a bowler since freshman year, has earned a top score of 223 out of a possible 300. "It's a way for me to vent — I just picture someone I hate as a pin and go for it."
Betsy Schmid ('01) practices her discus release pattern in the final minutes before her number is called to throw. Even though field events last only a few moments for each contestant involved, a great amount of practice and preparation culminates in those few moments, providing a considerable amount of pressure.

Brett Davidoff ('00) eyes the hole on the green as he prepares to tee off. Though it is extremely quiet on the green during a golf match, inside the mind of the golfer player is a mental checklist that is being constantly and thoroughly pored over at every given moment. Here, Davidoff takes his time so as to produce a clean and successful shot.

Watching his drive sail into the distance, Greg Markus ('00) puts his golf swing to the test during a competition. After practicing his swing for years, Markus uses it to gain an edge on his opponents as he positions the ball directly where he wants it. In golf, ball placement is vital to getting a low score, and the perfection of a proper swing plays an important role in achieving success.

GIRL'S TRACK AND FIELD: Wendy Adler, Elizabeth Agner, Lisa Altin, Christie Carlbone, Susan Caruso, Nandini Chakravarti, Victoria Chou, Eugenia Chung, Ananta Cohen, Ashley Cohen, Colleen Court, Laura Girard, Sara Hackmyer, Elizabeth Judd, Erica Lebowitz, Christina Magee, Gino Markman, Makiko Matsunoto, Christine Mullin, Vicke Mullin, Kimberly Pajak, Lindsey Pearl, Ashley Perkins, Kelly Perkins, Lauren Plaske, Hannah Plempton, Betsy Schmid, Samantha Shaffer, Kate VanBrouck, Christa Wesley, Judy Wu, Michelle Zaitz, Mr. Troutman (coach).
Instinctively reacting to the action on the field, Dan Goldstein ('00) never hesitates to throw out a runner attempting to steal a base—in this case, second base is in jeopardy. As a varsity catcher, Goldstein must keep an eye on each base runner as well as concentrate on each incoming pitch. While baseball doesn’t consist of a continuous flow of action, its unpredictability requires constant attention.

Mark Mahoney ('01) grimaces as his feeble swing makes direct contact with the ball, sending it down the third base line for a base hit. Despite all the preparation and conditioning baseball players face, the moment of successful contact provides enormous pressure and nerve-wracking anticipation of the outcome of the hit.

Chin tucked and arms extended, Lauren Plasky ('00) leaps over a hurdle as she warms up before a home meet. Plasky performs this routine not only to improve physical conditioning, but also to generate a mental and psychological preparation that each individual participant is responsible for when it comes time for competition.

For Love Of The Game

Driving a solid backhand deep into his opponent’s side of the court, Mike Nagelberg (’01) focuses all of his attention on the game that he loves. An individual sport, tennis demands a sense of discipline from the player that could not evolve without a significant amount of honest dedication.

Concentrating on her critical pitch, Rachel Sherman (’01) aims for a strike as she channels all of her energy and focus into the throw. For Sherman, as well as for the other players on the team, every moment during the high-pressure game provides a chance to perform as well as possible and to express love for the game.

Marisa Kravitz (’00) keeps her eye on the goal as she veers to avoid the onslaught of opponents during an intense moment of the varsity lacrosse match against Cherokee. Kravitz’s success as a varsity player comes mainly from her four years of constant dedication to the team.

LACROSSE: Mary Beth Ackerma, Jodi Bloch, Katie Boyle, Megan Butler, Jane Cabalo, Stephanie Chan, Kathryn Daly, Mary Daly, Renee Destrochers, Deanna DiBruno, Karen Donohoe, Rebecca Elias, Marissa Feng, Kimberly Fein, Jennifer Harris, Rachel Hershemberg, Stacey Husted, Perry Huang, Joanne Ilustre, Rachel Jander, Jenny Kamen, Ivy Katz, Aynen Kessler, Raleigh Kofir, Amanda Kravitz, Marisa Kravitz, Lauren Kresliff, Jessica Lazar, Rebecca Mulberg, Erin Mullen, Ambrean Ngov, Erin O’Donnell, Bianca Pandzi, Marisa Perotuz, Alyse Reed, Jackie Ross, Ashley Schlaifer, Carolyn Snyder, Megan Sember, Meredith Soile, Gill Sweeten, Jill Sweeten, Nicole Thunston, Selina Vasquez, Michelle Whalen, Ms. Schoole (coach).

BOY’S TENNIS: Ajit Dhillon, Justin Friedman, Daniel Geisler, Seth Herron, Wook Nam, Kim, Rob Koslow, Josh Lounette, Sameer Mathur, Michael Nagleberg, Karthik Natarajan, Rishi Patel, Ben Perkel, Jeremy Pick, Ian Richman, Daniel Reh, Michael Weitzman, Kobina Wilmot, Brad Wimmer, Daniel Yi, Cole Zucker, Mr. Ipri (coach).
Leaping over hurdles during practice is just one of the rigorous workout regimens that Nick Chan ('00) must undergo during the track season. As a seasoned athlete since his freshman year, Chan keeps his strict work ethic at top speed in order to stretch his limits to their utmost potential.

Meredith Sobie ('00) dashes up the field as she prepares to rocket the ball to a teammate in scoring position, while opponents from Wildwood press on. Sobie has earned her place as an aggressive varsity offensive player through four years of steady devotion to the team, which is reinforced by her love of the high-pressure, fast-paced environment that a lacrosse game generates.

Coach Grubb looks on as Jared Peltzman ('01) cocks his arm back in preparation for a massive javelin launch. Field events in track and field require steadfast commitment and perseverance for athletes to improve their ability. Peltzman has had three years to hone his javelin skills on the varsity track team.

SOFTBALL: Melissa Barto, Stephanie Berger, Perri Brenner, Janinie D'Auria, Jessica Gale, Meghan Gillmer, Jamie Goryazinski, Michelle Govito, Elizabeth Habina, Lindsay Hancock, Gina Maselli, Elena Medina, Brittany Moshen, Victoria Ross, Heather Sabatino, Kara Shore, Rebecca Soffen, Jordan Sullivan, Megan Thorpe, Sarah Wood, Jhane Zarghami, Mr. Musmecci (coach).

East challenged us like none other. We were immersed in an intense academic standard that pushed us to our limits. We survived long nights and strenuous tests. Once in a while, we started to question the purpose of our studying, but in the end, it was all worth it.

At the end of a long day, many students dread trudging up the stairs to an eighth period class. The solution to erase afternoon blues? Electives? Enter the world of art, music, drama, and even woodworking. For those who need a creative class to relax and refuel after a hefty load of academic subjects, electives offer a unique environment to learn about an interesting, fun, topic. Most electives are separate from the GPA ranking system, and therefore students don’t have the pressure to earn a specific grade. Rather, electives give many the chance to really enjoy learning about everything ranging from omelets to entrepreneurship. The students who just want to explore their areas of interest can choose from electives to get a taste of what they would like to pursue in college. So the next time school seems too overwhelming, remember to squeeze in an elective or two, taking the edge off of the grueling school day.

In an effort to build upon his artistic abilities, Huascar Kim (’01) carefully manipulates his original creation to create a work that will not only please the eye, but gain the admiration of his peers. In his 3-D art class, Kim can accomplish projects that he truly enjoys in addition to the grueling workload that school usually produces. Without hesitation, Kim shows his enthusiasm, “Most classes don’t let you express yourself the way that I like to, but art lets me get away from the regular school day so that I show who I am.”
Carefully placing her strokes, Morgan O’Neill (‘03) concentrates on her work in art class. Painting allows students to delve deep into the heart of the fine arts, by creating and interpreting their own projects. Here, O’Neill works at her own pace - above all, art electives require patience.

Anthony Divietro (‘03) meticulously straightens out a project in wood shop. Exactness is a necessary element in woodworking, to create a satisfying finished product. Many electives, like woodshop, enrich the student’s ability to perform and to create.

Charles Quickall ('00) tests a Bunsen burner during a chemistry experiment. Lab experiments offer students the opportunity to experience science firsthand. They also provide breaks from the sometimes dreary lectures and note-taking, and attract students' genuine interest.

Betty Jedlicka ('00) types up a lab report during her lab period. Many students make use of the computers and other technology at their disposal at school, rather than bringing their work home with them. Here, lab experiences are converted to a readable report to be read and graded by the teacher.

Carefully following the instructions in the lab manual, Diana Mark ('01) makes sure that the rest of her lab group dissects the fetal pig properly. In order to accomplish what science labs are designed to teach, the proper procedure must be used so that the accurate observations and data can be gathered. Ultimately, these results lead to the advancement of scientific achievement in school. Science teachers hope that these interactive activities will then create a genuine desire to learn.
What Day Is It?

What do dead frogs, corn kernels, and force tables all have in common? The answer — science lab. In the corridors of East’s science wings, experiments are conducted with a myriad of different equipment and, sometimes, specimen. First year biology students, for example, undergo an annual tradition: the breeding of the fruit flies. In addition to becoming a rite of passage for students, this infamous experiment teaches the fundamentals of genetic distribution in a very hands-on way. Indeed, “hands-on” comprises much of the labs at East. Forcing students to apply the textbook concepts into practical situations promotes the motto of action. Perhaps that is why it is easier for some to understand Newton’s laws of motion after completing an inclined plane lab; the students actually see the laws take effort. So, the next time that distinctive aroma of the fetal pig pervades through the school, don’t cringe. Take notice that deep within the classrooms lining the hallway, a student is discovering something real — and forever remembering the experience.

As one of the most intricate labs of the year, the fetal pig requires extra attention by the instructor. Each incision must be made precisely so that the anatomy of the specimen can be properly analyzed. Mr. Keller carefully explains the proper procedure for dissection to Renee Desrochers ('00) so that she can examine the animal on her own. Desrochers admits, “At first, I was really nervous, but with the appropriate instruction, I had the confidence to cut the pig where I was supposed to.”
PUSHING THE LIMITS

The bell rings, and about two dozen antsy high school students waltz into the classroom in the moments that follow. For these students, just another class of just another school day is about to begin. But, for their teachers, the same bell signifies the beginning of another attempt to prove themselves to their students.

Not only do teachers have to prepare plans for their instruction, they also must be prepared to answer any questions a student may have about the subject matter.

They must be able to stimulate student interest enough to spark discussions that break apart from the traditional humdrum of classroom conversation. The job of a teacher is to forge in his or her students the leaders of tomorrow.

Although the teaching process does not always flow smoothly, teachers remain unquestionably loyal to their students and confident in their own ability to raise the potential of a particular group of students. Their effort is respectable and worthy of much appreciation.

Math problems were never meant to be easy — and that’s where teachers like Mr. Kilbon come in. Attempting to break down a complex graphing problem into basic steps, Kilbon helps a student look at the problem from a different point of view. When solving such problems, sometimes it is best when the student and the teacher cooperate to come up with a more personal explanation of trouble areas.

During a Humanities AP group project, Mr. Hillman and Jon Sagot ’91 confer on the script for an upcoming skit. In classes like Humanities, the student often must work side by side with the teacher in order to fulfill the curriculum requirements — in this case, to gain approval for a presentation. Teacher input often helps add a special edge of insight to a student’s project.
Reviewing with a student the rudiments of drafting, Mr. Foster helps Adam Gottheim ('02) with some core concepts and revisions. In elective courses such as Woodshop and Drafting, teacher-student interaction is crucial because of the subject matter itself. Often, the teacher has field experience that can prove invaluable to a student eager to learn the fundamentals of a craft.

With the professional guidance of Mr. Kovnat, Alekay Patel ('00) carefully examines film negatives after he has developed his pictures. The unwavering dedication of Kovnat ultimately allows Patel to produce sharp photographs with ease. Throughout the school, teachers demonstrate a similar commitment to their students, allowing them to reach their potential.
Some say the years go by like minutes. Others say they take centuries. Still others say the years don't seem to go by at all.

Take one look at the library, and see all the sides of the spectrum. In one corner a student studies diligently in the midst of his quiet surroundings, hoping that the final ten minutes preparation before a test will make a difference. In another corner a student catches up on a calculator game, and sitting across from him a girl sees how big she can make her bubble gum before it explodes.

Out in the hallway, a student leans against her locker and immerses herself in her literature book. Down the hall a few students have gathered on the floor to converse and share stories of their weekend over a snack.

Whatever the case, students need time to both study and relax, and they find ways to do it all over the building throughout the school day.

Guiding Jason Schmidt ('02) as he works on a worksheet, Mrs. MacCall offers helpful advice to make the learning process as personal as possible. In a high school with roughly twenty-five students per class, it is often rare to have a one-on-one conference with a teacher. However, when it does happen, both people involved are rewarded with a valuable, insightful experience.

Making the most of his precious time, Andrew Kim ('00) carefully scans an article to prepare himself for class. During the day, students constantly review their work so that they will be ready for tests, presentations, and related discussions. Ultimately, the use of free time during the school day helps students achieve their goals.
During the hectic school day, sometimes a cafeteria break for lunch just isn’t enough. Lori Goldberg (‘01) takes a quick break between doing coursework and tries to relax before continuing onward. Taking these mini-breaks sometimes may alleviate the stress of a busy day, ultimately leaving the student refreshed and a little more energized to keep on going.

Taking some time out to enjoy a few moments of daydreaming before going back to work, Stevie Henry (‘01) lets life’s distractions lead her away. Sometimes, it is best to take a mental vacation from the pressures of school and life — and just relax for a moment.
The familiar slip of white paper signals their presence — the guidance office summons thee, therefore go down to thy counselor's office. For many students, a guidance pass gives them a chance to get out of class for a short period of time, but it is what goes on inside the office that truly allows students to get the most out of their classes during their four-year stay at East. Right from the very beginning, each freshman is assigned a guidance counselor with whom he or she will continue to work with from their sophomore course selection process until college planning — and beyond. Everything from family issues to academic goals can be discussed in the privacy of the guidance office, and many students do so, often requesting an appointment to talk to their counselor about something that has been bothering them. In a sense, many of the guidance counselors have been unsung heroes who have helped their students reach their goals and dreams all while staying on the right track to enjoying high school. Because these four years spawn a search for identity in many students, sometimes amidst all of the confusion, a helping hand greatly eases the difficult process of coming into one's own. For Genevieve LaFerriere ('00), having a guidance counselor helped her stay on track amidst the hectic college process. "My counselor was really good at getting things done when I needed them done pronto — and also she kept me going with the reminders of when my deadlines were," LaFerriere said.

Taking a trip to his counselor's office, Brian Bussey ('02) enters the hallway where the academic life of each student is nurtured and maintained. In this hallway, counselors handle numerous issues beginning freshman year with the basic schedule to the completion of college applications during senior year. Often overlooked, this hallway plays a major role in the success of a student during the high school years. Taking time to explain the features of East's curriculum, Mr. Schilling designs a plan for Gentilier Fineeman ('02) to fit her needs for the following school year. Everyone possesses distinct interests and talents which match a certain set of courses. Guidance counselors are trained to recognize these characteristics in an effort to craft the perfect schedule for each student.
Thoughtfully considering a request of Diana Mackenzie ('03), Mrs. Jordan carefully evaluates an academic dispute. After weighing every possibility, Jordan will devise a solution. Constantly faced with complaints over numerous issues, counselors give an effort to resolve each case on an individual basis, hoping to satisfy the needs of each party.

Enjoying a pleasant dialogue, Janet Zhang ('00) casually talks with Mr. Cole in his office about her academic decisions. While some discussions may contain serious issues, students can also hold amiable conversations with their counselors about everyday topics. Even lacking a serious problem to resolve, the guidance office acts to provide a sense of comfort during the course of the volatile school day.

Contemplating his upcoming conference, Chris Williams ('00) finger's in the guidance hallway awaiting his turn. Putting all their heart into their duties, counselors usually devote extra time to their appointments. While this may delay the start of the next meeting, it is the most practical way to form ideal solutions to frustrating problems.

Patiently sitting in the waiting area, Tiffany Yang ('02) makes the most of her time by reviewing notes for a test the next period. In the guidance office, the counselors running slightly late, provide a perfect period to study. During the school day, students constantly find small sections of free time to prepare themselves for class, in an effort to make the day less stressful.
Sacrificing his own time, Pat Alpas (’00) comes to the desk of Lauren Swint (’00) to help her with a chemistry problem. Alpas exhibits the selflessness which plays an integral role in successful relations amongst students.
Instead of selfishly keeping knowledge to themselves,
students throughout the school assist their classmates with their work, ultimately raising the level of education as a whole.

Collectively working on a large section of artwork,
Wendy Adler (’02), Lauren Kresloff (’02), and Taylor
Mach (’02) combine their efforts in the ultimate gesture of teamwork. Each member of the group contributes their own individual expression to the painting, resulting in a unique product which meshes a part of each student’s personality into a singular piece.

Studiously examining the local newspaper, James
Carter (’01) points out an interesting idea to Albert Hooper (’00). Carter may have noticed a fact that Hooper skimmed over, thus bringing it to his attention.
Together, they gain a more enriching experience as they become increasingly aware of the current events which take place around them.

Randy Shapiro (’02) and Kristin Chernoff (’02) assist each other while analyzing the results of a science lab.
Together, more ideas are brought into the conversation, thereby reducing the chances of an error in the data. If one member of a group cannot understand a certain concept, the other can help, thus creating a greater appreciation of the subject material.
Sharing The Wealth

With the prospect of facing another long night of studying for the important test the next day, many students turn to other people, especially friends, for help. Often, a study session with another person brings new details to light, or provides a safety net if one person doesn't understand a concept or a passage. Besides the academic motives, studying with a friend allows time to catch up for the time lost between practices, homework, and after school jobs.

Working in a group is another form of cooperative learning usually set up by teachers for a more complicated project. Some students enjoy group projects, while others prefer individual assignments. On a subject that many students have mixed feelings about, Anila Naqvi ('00) says “Overall, working in groups encourages socializing and adapting to other people, but it can be difficult because people don't always do their work.” Whether or not students have good experiences with group work depends on each person’s input. With fresh ideas and a variety of perspectives, working with other people adds another angle to the challenging work at East.

Melissa Barto ('00) carefully clears away debris, allowing Emily Saidel ('01) to make precise incisions where the biology lab procedures indicate. While Barto may not be actively cutting the fetal pig, Saidel would not be able to perform her task without the necessary assistance. Ultimately, these partners must cooperate together in an effort to complete the assignment flawlessly.

Attempting to mold a block of clay into a masterpiece, Danielle Lamberski ('01) accepts the expert assistance of Ms. Krott. While students maintain the ability to express themselves freely in their work, one cannot deny the professional advice that a teacher can give. In the school community, teachers act as facilitators of a student's untapped potential.
Change Of Pace

It has become somewhat of an annual tradition. Every year, Psychology students bring in one (or, for some brave souls, two) young children as part of the festivities of Child Development Day. As part of the curriculum on how children develop mentally, physically and rationally, students are asked to conduct various types of experiments involving children as young as three years old to the age of twelve or thirteen. It is the perfect example of putting textbook theories to the test in the practical world of children. Students unfamiliar with the specific experiments nevertheless notice the ubiquitous presence of little children, tiny backpacks and all, tottering around the hallways. Jay Kothari ('00), a Psychology AP student, brought in a seven-year-old family friend. “My experiences on Child Development Day were pretty fun, actually — not chaotic at all,” Kothari said. “My kid and I just sat around and made each other laugh — he made my day more interesting, definitely.”

In addition to helping the students understand just how psychological theories applied in the real world, the children added some spice to an otherwise typical day. Kothari said, “It was another day of acting like a kid, only this time I had an excuse to.”

Greeting the child Janine Cohen ('00) has brought into school for her psychology studies, Brian Jones ('00) makes the infant feel comfortable in the strange world full of adolescents known as high school. Jones attempts to relieve the intimidation that the young children must endure as they are exposed people almost three times their size, helping to make the day successful for both subject and student.

Observing the new additions to his English class, Mikael Avery ('00) realizes that the day will be much different from the others as Haley Rubin ('00) attentively cares for her psychology subjects. Through occasionally presenting a distraction from teacher, the psych kids are tolerated by students and teachers alike as the annual event is respected as a genuine scientific research experiment.
With a caring smile, Laura Davis ('00) does not view the psychology subjects as mere experimental “guinea pigs.” Davis realizes that these children will mature, and eventually sit in the same classrooms that she sits in every day. The youthful innocence that the psychology classes investigate must be examined quickly, for it will soon disappear with the loss of childhood.

Making the most of the unique opportunity to introduce young children to East, Haley Rubin ('00) brings two subjects into school for her psychology class. The “psych” students ultimately obtain invaluable data from the participation of their subjects, allowing them to form unique conclusions about the mental perspective of a maturing individual.

Using the combination of a handful of crayons and a coloring book, Lisa Beck ('00) attempts to entertain her psych-subject during one of her daily classes. Beck will have to concentrate on the material taught by the teacher without losing awareness of the child’s actions. Throughout the day, psychology students must balance these tasks in a difficult juggling act, however, the struggle is worthwhile as the day forms lasting memories.

Mr. Branin, Kim Goldman ('00), and Julie Warshaver ('00) steal Rachel Lieberman ('01) away from some last-minute studying to chat. Both activities rarely surface in classrooms, especially in performing arts classes like East Singers. However, the arrival of a substitute like Mr. Branin allows for a more casual atmosphere.
Using the high speed connections in the library, Jon Segal ('01), Hollie Baratolo ('00), and Kristen Merlino ('01) make use of the Internet to uncover obscure research information within seconds. The evolution of this limitless network containing vast amounts of knowledge has revolutionized the way students research and learn about ideas. Information, previously inaccessible, can now be found at the fingertips of every student.

By consulting the Computer Graphics textbook before applying the knowledge into technology, Chris Kewley ('01) maximizes his ability to utilize complex drawings on the computer. Learning how to use technology properly is essential in order to gain a learning experience that can be valuable in the future.

Using a graphing calculator to simplify a complex problem, Howard Chang ('00) bypasses much of the arduous bookwork that characterizes many of the assignments in calculus. Without the need to spend time writing out numerous formulas, Chang can concentrate on understanding the actual principles involved in mathematics.

In one of the most technology-oriented classes in the school, Josh Meyeroff ('00) focuses his camera to gain the clearest possible picture. Advances in the field of photography have given rise to a course which utilizes numerous pieces of technological equipment, designed only to produce the most brilliant images.

Two decades ago, math and science classes were limited to the textbooks and little else. With the dawning of the computer revolution within the past decade, however, new opportunities for teaching students concepts in almost every class made education more innovative than ever. Now, it is typical to see PreCalculus and Calculus students armed with their graphing calculators working on a lab that requires inputting and analyzing data. Textbooks now have new versions in which technological activities are incorporated into the curriculum. Additionally, the internet makes doing research for classes such as Psychology and English just a few clicks of the mouse away—a far cry from the sometimes tedious task of going through the shelves at the local library. Because students benefit so much now from the easy accessibility of information, new technological innovations constantly improve how one can process and receive data.
For some of us, the realization that it really is almost over occurs right at the last moment. But for many of us, it comes at prom, during the last dance. Or, it comes at a baseball game, with a final home run, or step across home plate. Or, it’s at a concert, where we give our best performance, and shed the accompanying tear that always goes with it. But at graduation, all of our hearts are in our throats, and we know that we have truly come to the end of the road.

Your outer beauty is lovely.
It's your inner beauty that counts!
You are unique in so many ways.
Like a needle in a haystack.
A young woman like you is hard to find.
Your values and self-respect are quite evident and those who truly know you best.
Will agree on what an incredibly special individual you are.
As your parents we feel so blessed.
We are filled with such love, pride, and strong emotion.
As you enter this new plateau of your life, college.
Congratulations on all you have accomplished.
And heart felt best wishes on all that your future holds.
Daddy and I have always told you that you're an amazing person.
As you grow and learn, upon the path of life.
Never settle for anything less.
We admire and love you much more than words can say.
For ever...

RECIPE FOR A MINI JULE

INGREDIENTS: Equal parts

* great friend       * foul mouth
* complete disorganization * loving daughter * caring sister       * Leo’s adoring "mother"
* dynamite fashion sense * designated driver

Mix together. Add parental guidance and infinite patience. Sprinkle with Jewish values. Place in a bedroom with telephone, caller ID and pager. Close the door. Allow to mellow and age.

To determine if properly done pierce the ear, three times. When the creation cools off open bedroom door. Viola! Behold the creation: intelligent, beautiful, sensitive, loyal and fun-loving. JULIA.

WE LOVE YOU VERY, VERY MUCH! MOM, DAD, ANNA, RACHEL....Kiwi, Athena, LEO and of course, BUBBIE TOLA, BUBBIE JOSIE and POP.

Julia,
You are my older sister who I look up to and admire. Believe it or not, I have spent my whole life trying to be like you. I admire your dedication when you put your mind to something that is important to you. I love you more than anything, and I wish you so much luck in your future as the owner of a small dress shop. I'll always remember:

- our summers in LBI
- calling you Deede
- sleeping in your room when Tuvi came to visit
- spitting on your pillow when we were at war
- borrowing your clothes
- “Luke, I am your father!”
- watching Days of Our Lives and then Passions
- liking the same guys that once liked you
- asking you for rides everywhere

Jul- I love you so much.

Love,
Your little sister who is bigger than you,
Rachel

To a great daughter, sister, and friend.

Congratulations, you’re the best! Enjoy your time in college, and always remember to stop and smell the roses.

We’re behind you all the way.

No, every time I take you to Bill’s just to get guppies, you take 45 minutes ... Hey there guys whacha got?... Jenni or Steven, (very long pause) you haven’t seen the camera, have you?... Steve, this time I promise, I am going to go the speed limit all the way home, ok... Ohhhhh, gas costs sooo much... I swear, I want someone to steal my car, they can take it, I don’t really care... Jen, do you think we can take it down to maybe 85 MPH on Springdale?... Jen, no matter how many times I complained and maybe still didn’t eat it, I love your cooking. Still though Jen, could ya turn the volume down on the radio in the bathroom? Our late night adventures to dinners. My fear of being in the middle of South Philly just to get some stupid water ice from the street corner of which they claim they invented the gelate. The look on my face when I saw your tattoo for the first time, and I was trying to convince myself that it wasn’t permanent. Going to Sakura and spending like 7 million dollars or something on one meal. Through all these memories and our family videos, there is just one really important one that I forgot to mention: you being the greatest sister there ever was in the world. No matter how much we fought, no matter how much you punched me or kicked or spit on me and I still didn’t touch you, I have something to say that I don’t think you have ever heard me say... I love you. And I am glad that you are my sister, and I would be lost without the gentlest hand of yours to help me through the curves, bumps, ups, downs, and pitfalls of life. Thank you for being the greatest sister ever, I love you. 😊
Dear Joshua,

Congratulations on a tremendous four years. We know the next four will be as triumphant.

Let us wish you all the happiness and success you can ever want. We know you will always make us as proud as you have done in the past.

Friends can last forever,
always to be there,
They give a little friendship,
and show you that they care.
You gave me strength,
when I was down,
Lighted up smiles,
where once was a frown,
Confidence was given,
and acceptance was gained,
You were a sunny spot,
whenever it rained,
You made me laugh,
in good times and bad,
You shouldered the tears,
when I was sad,
Friends are important,
not just for being there,
But for feelings they bring you,
the feelings they care.

Kate:

With all the changes, the smile is still the same: filled with love and mischief. We thank you for sharing both with us. We send you off with love and excitement for all that is about to come. Our hearts are with you forever.

Love, Mom, Dad, Jenny, Teddy and Eli

Decade for Daughters
By: Sandra Gales Shapard

Take my hand my daughter,
And let's move together
Toward your future
It's a decade for daughters
And you are here
With all your energy
Your bright eyes
Your ready mind
Willing to share my decade
While rushing to get Started on one of Your own.

I am so proud of you from shy, little girl to Varsity Cheerleader to Graduating Senior!   Love, Mom

Dear Shera,

You light up our lives!

May that light always shine down upon you and your dreams!

We love you always,
Mom, Dad, Shana & Muffin

Dear Lindsay,

With bright brown eyes and a head full of curls, You've always been one of those very special girls. Bringing laughter and love to your family and friends, We know that your journey now begins and not ends. So you'll move on to college and many different scenes, But you'll always be our Lindsay who fulfills all our dreams.

Love,
Mom, Dad and Shelby

Lara

You have style, charm and wit that are truly your own.
Your self-confidence allows you to stand tall and alone.
You'll take off and fly solo very soon.
And thank you so much for cleaning your room!

"From then until now. The good times and, the bad, we will always hold a special place in each others heart forever!"

Keith & Kelly

We're so proud and love you dearly,
Mom, Dad, Nicholas, Vincent, and Maggie
A Poem for "Us"

A twin is something special,
As special as can be,
But nothing can beat,
The bond between him and me.

I have other siblings,
None as special as he,
He is always there,
To stick up for me.

From sharing our rooms,
To sharing our birthdays,
We don’t often part,
We have our special ways.

We have a bond,
A bond from the past,
Through the fights we have,
The bond it will always last.

When Jon went in for surgery,
I was very mad,
What did he do,
To deserve something so bad.

We have come to the time,
Where we have to part,
It is off to college,
To act all smart.

When the surgery was over,
I did not really mind,
I was happy he was “OK”,
Yet sad, that he was blind.

Although we are apart,
The memories won’t end,
You’re not just my brother,
Your also - - my FRIEND!!

Love Always,
Your Twin Sister,

Debbie

Deborah and Jonathan Goodman
Joanne-
I’m so happy to see you succeeding! Congrats on all of your accomplishments! Thanks for being the best big sister a brother could ever have. I love you lots!
I know I haven’t said it very often, and I know I haven’t showed it very often, (haha) but I do, and don’t forget that!

Good Luck!

We laughed, we cried, we shared clothes
We played freeze tag, we shopped, we even played with paper dolls
But most of all, we spent 18 years of our life as best friends.

Not only have you grown up to be an intelligent young woman
But you’ve grown up to be the beautiful person we grew to love.

We are so very proud of all you have accomplished and all that you are Just remember one thing before you embark on your journey
Make your future be as special as the times we shared in the past

Love,
Kris & Cathy

Sisters

We're sisters forever, forever we will be,
I call you Mel and you call me Kri,
We're so very close, only a year and a half apart,
Even though you'll be at college, you're always in my heart.
It seems just like yesterday we were playing on the swings,
Don't you really miss doing all of those silly things?
All of these great memories seem like yesterday,
The years go by so fast, at least that's what they say.
So now you're off to college, I know that you must go,
But there is something else I think that you should know:
I LOVE YOU!!

Dear Rachel,
Life brings us many gifts,
But none so special as you.
Your smile, your love, and your strength,
Is in everything you do.

No challenge for you is ever too great,
No small task ever too much.
A friend, a sister, a daughter,
A gift to whose lives you touch.

Watching you grow has brought endless joy,
Pride and love that the two of us share.
As you continue to grow, be happy,
And know that I'm always there!

Love,
Mom

Sara - Over the fourteen years we have spent together, we have shared many memories, some good and some not so good. Though my room was never clean, you always helped me clean it. And whenever I forgot to take my shoes off before going upstairs, you always kindly reminded me to take them off. And when you shut your door on Jessie's nose, Adam B. and I were very supportive to help you get through such a traumatizing situation. On a serious note, you have always been there for me when I needed you. Just remember, I will always be there for you. I know that when you go to school, you will excel in whatever you set out to do. And remember, you can always call me when your computer breaks, but unfortunately you can't call me to get your things when you leave them upstairs! And I hope that you find a "fashion coordinator" as talented as I am! I love you now and always.

Love, Adam (and Jessie, who loves you too!)

DEAREST SARA,

"Those who wish to sing always find a song"

You fill our lives with sunshine, happiness, and music
We are so proud of all that you have accomplished
Make all your dreams come true

A lifetime of love, support, hugs and kisses
Mom, Dad & Laura

Pete-
With all of your talents and determination, we are confident your dreams just lie ahead. So reach for the stars if you like, and don’t forget the guitar, drums, and mic. As far back as we can remember, music has been a part of your life. Never lose sight of your values and what is important to you. But most of all, the golden friendships that will last a lifetime.

We are very proud of you and your many accomplishments.

We love you very much,
Mom, Dad, Jen, and Alex
To Laugh often and much;
To win the respect of intelligent people and affection of children;
To earn appreciation of honest critics and endure the betrayal of false friends;
To appreciate beauty, to find the best in others;
To leave the world a little better whether by a healthy child,
A garden patch or a redeemed social condition;
To know even one life has breathed easier because you have lived; this is to have succeeded.

-R.W. Emerson

DEAR MR. TERRANOVA,

WE ACCEPT THE FACT THAT WE HAD TO SACRIFICE COUNTLESS HOURS OF OUR LIVES AS A RESULT OF THE FORMAL EDUCATION RUNNING THROUGHOUT THIS SCHOOL FOR WHATEVER IT WAS WE DID WRONG. BUT WE THINK YOU'RE CRAZY TO MAKE US WRITE AN ESSAY TELLING YOU WHO WE ARE. YOU SEE US AS YOU WANT TO SEE US...IN THE SIMPLEST TERMS, IN THE MOST CONVENIENT DEFINITIONS. BUT WHAT WE FOUND OUT IS THAT EACH OF US IS A MUSICIAN...AND A KINDRED SPIRIT...AND A PACIFIST...AND A THINKER.

DOES THAT ANSWER YOUR QUESTION?

SINCERELY YOURS,

"The most fundamental element of love
Is true friendship"

To Katie: I am so happy you came into my life. You are not only my love but my best friend. You will be in my heart forever. Love, Jason

To Jason: Since the first day, you have shown me how it feels to be in-love. You have given me a friendship that will last a lifetime and happiness that will complete me forever. Love, Katie

The magic of first love is our ignorance that it can never end.

Alexis:
The times we shared can not be replaced.
The memories I hold will not be forgotten.
There was a time when you were my world.
But even though that has changed.
You will always mean the world to me.
And that can not change. No matter where the roads
Of life take me, you will be there FOREVER.
I will love you always - John

John:
Although the future is uncertain.
I am sure of one thing.
No matter what path we might take.
No one will ever replace the footprints
You've left on my heart.
I might be two steps behind or two steps ahead.
But if you should turn, you'll find me beside you.
I will love you always and forever - Alexis

KAREN,

We could not have hoped for a daughter as lovely, talented, smart, honest and sweet as you are. All of these gifts combine to create the most important thing: A FINE YOUNG WOMAN OF OUTSTANDING CHARACTER.

All Our Love, Dad and Mom

Karen

We know that your sister is a tough act to follow, but we are confident that you will also make your mark at East. Enjoy your next three years!

All Our Love,
Mom and Dad

Dear Cheryl,

I seems like just yesterday that we were dropping you off for your first day of kindergarten. Even with all the changes in your life, you never gave up on your dreams and we know you have what it takes to make them come true.

Love,
Mom, Dad and Adam

Thank you Mr. Carr for your vision!

Adam —
Always fly high and reach for the stars! We love you and are proud of whatever you do. Congratulations!

Love you —
Mom, Dad, Marissa and the rest of the zoo!

From the yearbook crew
After many years, the men were back in charge of Eidolon. No more girly colors, fonts, and NO Hello Kitty pictures. We wanted a book of dignity, intelligence, and supreme thought... okay... so we sort of got lost along the way. Not even the power of our beloved inanimate rod of wisdom or the wrath of our advisor could keep us from turning crazy over the course of the year. Ever so slowly, our innocent looking room became the canvas for a weird and twisted surrealistic nightmare. Reality as we knew it no longer existed. Time was altered (thanks to our dying clock) and space was manipulated by the evil forces in the closet of mystery. With the shadow of Darth Vader looming in the distance, the yearbook editors were forced to work under the cruel powers of Andrew and Jeff who subjected the tired editors to loud, repetitive, and obnoxious dancebeats. As true examples of Machiavellian art, Andrew yelled out commands while Jeff was the enforcer instilling fear in all. Any worker who failed ended up in the trash can (literally). But in the end, all the work was done and the book was completed. We burned the midnight oil and survived. Some of you don’t know how much work goes into this book, cover to cover. Every word, title, picture, and layout came from the brilliant minds of the people on this page. We had fun making this book. Almost as much fun as making fun of the incompetent juniors. Thanks. We’ll miss you all!
We hugged, we shook hands, and we held back tears while we said goodbye. We left those ominous looking double doors for the final time as a student. Sure, we can come back; it will always be the same East. But it will never be the same, for us, again. As we return from our future endeavors and once again notice small differences, we also notice one big difference - we are no longer there, and it is no longer a part of our lives. But just visiting after only a couple of months away, and you know - it's always going to be a part of your life.

Life does not end here. We have merely crossed a great river; many seas still lie ahead. We will all see our share of storms along the way. But to every tide there is a calm, and in that gentle moment we remember where we came from, and we think about where we're going. We each have our own individual destinations - but always remember that we each set off from the same port, and that port will always be there, in shape and in spirit. Take time in your heart to revisit your home, for you can't know where you're going until you know where you've come from.
“Come to the edge, He said.
They said, we are afraid.
Come to the edge, He said.
They came.
He pushed them ... and they flew.”
Guillaume Apollinaire
