Of the 1600 National Merit Semi-Finalists, East has 15 this year. Juniors find out a month after taking the PSATs if they are National Merit Semi-Finalists by comparing their scores to a cutoff point. A National Merit Semi-Finalist, Ying-Ying Dong ('01), said, "The students at East are very ambitious and are taught at an early age to study and do well in school. Because of this environment, students challenge themselves and set high goals."

As Mr. Valore and Kristi Kligerman ('02) review a game plan for this basketball season, he gives her many helpful tips. For athletics, records, it personal or of the school, are established to be broken. "Confronting your competition either an opponent or an obstacle is the way an athlete sets and reaches goals. New challenges are what keep us motivated," said Kligerman.

Working under a PAVAS piece, Seokchan Shim ('01) tries to perfect his skeleton in AP Studio Art. Students look forward to being in PAVAS (Performing and Visual Arts Society) because they want to be part of an elite group. Seniors nominated by faculty have the opportunity to share their creative and artistic work on PAVAS day, which enables attendees to recognize students for their contributions to various art departments at East.

Throughout high school, students set various goals. Usually, students, stressing about their grades, aim high academically. Juniors and Seniors also aim for high scores on standardized tests such as the PSATs, SATs, and AP exams. Using these test scores and other information colleges need, East students try getting into their number once choice for college. Frequent discussions with guidance counselors and meetings with college representatives take place during the year. In addition to achieving academic goals, many also pursue goals for their pas-to accomplish what must be done.” - Alan Leff ('01)

Posting fliers on the bulletin board in front of D-wing, Jenny Goldsmith ('01) and Michelle Polansky ('01) keep the members of the Thespian Society informed. Getting involved in clubs usually helps students to become heads of those clubs.

Brian Locasale ('02) waits patiently outside his guidance counselor's office. Students, especially juniors and seniors, often make appointments to talk with their guidance counselors about questions concerning grades and colleges.

Our Mark®

sions in clubs, art, or athletics. What-ever after school activities East students participate in, they always work hard and strive for success. The East community takes pride in its diverse clubs and in successful East athletics. These goals set in academics, athletics and other pursuits help make East a “star school.” Said Principal Gallagher, “This is the highest honor that the State of New Jersey bestows on a school, and validates for us all the great things that East does for students.”

College Craze

“I think it's important to look at many colleges to compare all aspects like size, location, campus life, and people, so I can choose what's best for me.” - Jason Insdorf ('02)

“Why not put your talent to use by going to college and getting a good education?” - Shirinta McBrady ('02)

“As an underclassman, I work hard to get good grades; so in a couple of years, I can go to the college of my choice.” - Julia Letteeri ('03)
For much of the school year, students had to deal with the ongoing construction. Ignoring the clattering from the machinery often became hard. Mostly because of the dangers of the construction, the school became a virtual maze after 3:00 P.M. Also, the need to evacuate several classrooms caused a significant inconvenience.

Tiffany Yang ('02) uses her time after school to search for information on the Internet in the library. Gradually, pages from reference books are being replaced with pages on the web because homework is starting to revolve around the Internet. Yang said, "The Internet cuts down a lot of time when I have to do research for an essay."

While Ryan Gutman ('03) anxiously figures out the last test questions, he tries to ignore the clock as it ticks away. Not all students are capable of keeping focus under testing conditions, but as they grow accustomed to more and more tests, they learn skills applicable to midterms, finals, and even SATs.

During a lecture, Jen Levy ('02) asks Mr. Vranich a question concerning the shape of certain molecules. He answers her questions using individual wooden pieces to create a series of models representing the complex nature of molecular structures. As an experienced Vertebrate Anatomy teacher, Mr. Vranich understands the techniques necessary to create an environment that helps students fully comprehend the lesson.
Kim Moore ('02) listens intently as Mr. Canzanelle gives her tips that improve her essay. Staying after school to ask teachers for extra help becomes part of students' daily routines. Students often ask teachers for extra help when they want to boost their grades or are confused about part of a lesson.

THE DAILY GRIND

Life can be monotonous and difficult for a high school student. After waking up early in the morning, students head for class to begin yet another grueling day of taking tests, sitting through lectures, presenting projects, and meeting with teachers. Whether keyboarding or chemistry is listed on a student's schedule, East students work diligently to survive each school day and to finish endless hours of homework. Many students try to pencil in six hours of sleep, but in addition to regular schoolwork, juniors and seniors must also juggle standardized exams and the college selection process.

As if life were not tough enough, this school year, students and teachers had to work around the din and the restrictions from the ongoing construction. The hammering and noisy machinery are annoying distractions, and some teachers lost valuable class time while searching for an available classroom each day. "It was frustrating for both my students and me because we didn't have our own lab room, which was very inconvenient. However, we just kept thinking about the state-of-art facility that we would be able to use to integrate technology into biology labs," said Mr. Anthony Robino. Whatever problems arise, East faculty and students get through their daily routines.

Carefully testing the pH of soil in Environmental Studies, Kim Cohn ('01) and Gigi Bona ('01) are able to visualize first-hand the effects of toxic substances. Weekly labs provide an inviting approach toward learning, because students are eager to conduct their experiments.

With Mrs. Schuster as the mediator, Carly Stein ('03), Brandon Kim ('03), and other students, analyze Ellen Foster together, creating an effective learning environment. Class discussions, especially when students arrange their desks in a large circle, encourage active participation. These kinds of discussions provide more enjoyable alternatives to dull memorization.
Like Beth Smulyan ('01) (below) and Royce Agner ('02) (right), students often look forward to free time after school. However, they usually end up searching for quiet areas to do their homework because the break from classes does not give them a break from work. Agner said, "When I finish one assignment, there are always three more to replace it; but this heavy workload prepares us for demanding schedules in the future, especially in college."

In the B-wing computer lab, Ruby Hou ('02) finishes her Algebra ditto after English class. During school, students like Hou use any time at the end of class to try to decrease the amount of homework for that evening.

During the short five minutes offered between classes, Adam Robbins ('02) and Lori Cohen ('01), walking down the stairs, have a quick conversation. Since students take time to socialize with their friends between periods, they run the risk of being late to class. Robbins said, "The five minutes, although a precious break from the monotony of the school day, is not enough time because students are tempted to socialize in order to catch up on weekend affairs and daily gossip."

With an extra hour after school, Dan Nagelburg ('04) catches up on the weekly entertainment news by reading People Weekly magazine. Until 5:30, everyone students stay in the
With the chaos of a normal day at East, nothing can suffer more than stressed friendships. Lisa Browne (‘03), Jade Dalampines (‘03), and Tiffany Shaw (‘03) present that by making up for lost time after the school day.

While waiting to get his picture taken in the auditorium, Mark Corcoran (‘02) takes advantage of this free period and technology with his TI-83. When students are bored, they usually grab their TI-83 calculators or cell phones and play various games, including Tetris, while hoping not to get caught.

Take a Breath

When dealing with the daily grind of school, East students are always elated when they have a few minutes to catch up with friends or homework. Between classes, students converse about classes, the latest gossip, and, of course, homework. If students can find time during a class, they finish some homework, stress about a test coming up the next period, or tutor their fellow classmates in the three R’s: reading, writing, and arithmetic. With the cafeteria closed after school this year, resourceful students had to find alternatives to spend time with their friends. In addition, technology has given students new kinds of stress relievers like playing games on graphing calculators. Despite all the technological advances, students still enjoy using their breaks just to hang out.
The art of photography attracts many of East's juniors and seniors such as Emily Saidel ('01) and Lindsay Strug ('01), who like to express themselves through a different medium. Because all levels of photography are only offered to the upperclassmen, students usually jump at the chance to sign up for those courses.

Passions

Students at East are passionate about their athletic and creative outlets. Whatever elective they take, be it music class, woodshop, or art class, motivated students give it their all as they make precise measurements and carefully paint within the lines. Athletes also enthusiastically participate in sports and put in many hours at the gym and on the field. Electives and extracurricular activities provide students with a means to escape the stress from academic work and let them focus on other areas of interest.

Scrubbing away the excess ink on her ink-resist painting for Foundations of Art, Lindsay Dobbin ('03) tries to expose as much painted surface as possible. Basic level art classes allow students with little artistic experience and unexplored artistic potential to express themselves.

Caught in the act of kicking the football, Greg Frade ('02) coordinates skill, experience and concentration. These three traits are essential in all sports in which East athletes participate. "Because the coaching staff has improved, I think that with what I have learned I can get a scholarship and attend a good college," said Frade.
Completing parfèches in 3-D Art, Juli Mulreany ('03) only paints with colors the Indians had. In 3-D Art, students including Mulreany learn how to create art pieces through a variety of media ranging from paper to pottery clay.

Miss Ferguson, playing a chord on the piano, guides Vocal Workshop through “Smooth.” She incorporates personal experience and skills to the benefit of the class. As a teacher and conductor, she makes all of her students into better singers.

Working carefully in woodshop, Chris Hartung ('01) applies filler onto his shelf. Students often choose specific electives in order to give them time between academic classes to pursue their passions. Hands on classes sometimes offer the most rewarding experiences. Hartung said, “I love woodshop not only because my teacher makes it fun, but also because I don’t think about schoolwork while I’m in that class.”

Scaling his mechanical drawing, Joe Warowitz ('03) practices his skill as an amateur architect. In Drafting, students focus on basic assignments which will teach them how to create their own drawings. Classes like Drafting build a solid foundation for aspiring mechanics and architects.

ESPN freshmen - The Worldwide Leader in FRESH!
Ben Whitten ('01), the man behind the mask, roars with passion for the team. The football players can get a lot of energy from the crowd and the East mascot. Whitten says, "The team needs the crowd in the game, so it's my job to get the fans all riled up."

As the sun shines down on the bleachers, devoted fans watch an East football game. Classmates and family members enthusiastically root for the athletes. The East football team has not been particularly successful lately but the East community continues to cheer on its team to "restore the pride."

With Kim Cohn ('01) and Amanda Scara ('01) leading the pack, the cheerleaders perform "Action," their most spirited cheer. Without the spirit that the cheerleaders provide, victory would be virtually impossible because they serve as the glue to maintain the high level energy between the fans and the players.

VIVA LA EAST!

Every November, many East students participate in Spirit Week. Freshmen, sophomores, and juniors fight for points while trying to beat the seniors. Students scratch their heads at difficult trivia and Name That Tune questions, while others put themselves through the sour task of eating lemons. SGA representatives and class officers encourage everyone to help build booths and floats, and gain a lead in the standings.

Some people are concerned about the general lack of school spirit at East even during Spirit Week; however, some students show their school spirit year round. Cheerleaders and the school mascot, the Cougar, root for East athletes, and junior and senior girls participate in the annual Powder Puff Football game. Despite a buffet of activities, many students and teachers, including Mr. Deluca, East's Activities Coordinator, believe that school spirit is declining. Mr. Deluca says, "I would hope more students got involved, but those who do participate, do so eagerly." Therefore, although the East Cougar roars more softly than in years past, it still roars proudly.
Greeting each other before the first bell signals the start of another school day, Justin LaRogne ('01) and Sarah Moore ('03) have a quick chat about the events of the past weekend. Because school buses arrive at East around 7:25 AM, students have about twenty minutes to socialize before homeroom.

Taking advantage of working in pairs, Megan Butler ('01) listens attentively as Karen Donahoe ('01) helps her with an English assignment. When dull classroom lectures lose students' interests, classmates turn to each other for clarification on the subject. Explaining concepts to their peers also reinforces the material for the "tutor."

PAINTING THE SCHOOL RED

A school day at East can be very hectic. When students find a few moments to socialize with their friends, they make the most of it. In the morning, students have plenty of time to greet each other since many buses arrive earlier than the homeroom bell. However, throughout the rest of the day, fleeting intervals between classes are hardly enough for students to catch up on the day's latest developments. Therefore, those who cannot wait to chat with friends or who need to release a load of stress welcome free periods such as lunch and study hall. For instance, music students eat lunch in the company of their peers, holding conversations that bring them closer with each passing day. After their break, students return to class where they often assist each other with difficult material being taught. Having encouraging and helpful classmates make the classroom environment more comfortable and enjoyable. After school, students often make plans with friends. Whether it be forming a study group, going to see the weekend's movie releases, or simply enjoying one another's company, every student needs a social outlet to relieve the academic stress that affects us all.
Taking a break between classes, Sarah Crete ('01) shares a laugh with a group of her friends. Like most students at East, they relieve a little stress before moving on to the next class. Though five minutes is only a short break, a good laugh is always therapeutic.

As Lisa Altino ('00) dials on the pay phone, Sue Caruso ('01) plans her afternoon on her cell phone. While pay phones are available for students to use, cell phones gradually became more popular among teenagers this year. Besides being a trend, they are also more convenient because as teens expand their social lives, they find it difficult not to have a cell phone.

Before heading off to their after-school activity, Kim Wisely ('03) takes a few minutes to ask Mary Daly ('01) for advice on balancing getting good grades while maintaining a social life. Having upperclassmen mentors gives underclassmen insight in dealing with the daily struggles at East. Said Daly, "I enjoy giving underclassmen survival tips I have learned about East."

Social Life at East

Before a test next period, Samantha Zweber ('01) teaches Natali Gleitzer ('01) a problem from a Calculus book. Although teachers are available before and after school for extra help, students many times turn to their friends for assistance. "Sometimes it is much easier to get a friend to explain something than a teacher," said Sarah Daly ('01). Alex Goldstein ('02), and James Gillespie ('02) share a quick bite a few moments at the beginning of Wind Ensemble. Students who take more electives instead of lunch usually eat together in class and then get back to work.
Although the 2:25 bell is intended to indicate the end of the school day, many students interpret it as the commencement of a new day. Finally free from monotonous lectures and difficult tests, East students brush aside their exhaustion from academics and switch gears to enter a different kind of schedule.

After school, many students take advantage of the wide range of extracurricular activities East offers. From athletes to debaters to musicians, East offers its facilities to students who feel they do not gain enough from 8AM to 2:25 PM. However, students are not restricted to school functions to engage in activities. Many work part-time at places such as the local Jewish Community Center, where they can have fun and learn how to function in a working environment. Only after students finish these activities will the school day be truly over.

On a Craft Club/RAK field trip after school to Marriott Assisted Living Center, Diana Tang ('01) discusses with Myles Sehested the change in prices of cameras over the years. Students who converse with the elderly not only gain insight on life in the early twentieth century, but also brighten the day of the senior citizens. Tang said, “They’re always so happy to tell me such interesting stories when I visit them. It’s surprising what great senses of humor the residents like Miles have.”

Taking a stand against the topic of the week, Dave Firestein ('01), a member of JSA makes three strong points supporting why he opposes homosexuality in the military. JSA, Junior Statesmen of America, meets weekly after school to debate controversial issues. Clubs like JSA gives students a chance to analyze issues in another point of view.

Practicing the French horn in the band room, Karen Kruse ('01) takes advantage of the available school facilities after classes. Areas such as D-wing are always open to students who want to spend extra time improving certain skills.
Samantha Baun ('02), Jirada Prakmanond ('01), and Heather Sabatino ('01) quietly chat about a new store in Philadelphia. Students often take this time between school and after school life to relax and acquire knowledge that they cannot learn from books.

At a girls' volleyball practice, Margo Buchalski ('03) peppers with other members on her team. Many East students like Buchalski who devote much of their time to sports find themselves trying to budget their time between classes and time-consuming extracurricular activities.

At the Jewish Community Center, Rebecca Elias ('01) and Havi Elkaim, a student at Lenape High School, spend their afternoons from 3:15 PM to 6:15 PM at the Kidz Korner day care program. Like Elias, students tend to pick part-time jobs that would be both a rewarding and fun experience. "I enjoy working with children and being with my friends at the same time," said Elias.
As students pick up their pencils and begin scrawling answers onto their English test, their concentration is broken by the clamor and fumes that seeps through the cracks between the classroom windows. This scenario is all too familiar for students and faculty, as the construction outdoors is often to blame for distracted students and annoyed teachers. However, along with the chaos brings new improvement to East’s decaying building. The exterior of B and C wings are being rebricked, and East’s biology and physics labs have been renovated.

In with the...
What were once dull rooms with paint that peeled off the lab tables, water that uncontrollably shot out of the faucets, and clogged drains that refused to let the water down are now brighter, larger, and more attractive labs. The rooms are equipped with new mechanics and computers. In addition, the lockers and stairwells have been painted red and white to enhance the appearance of the interior of the school. While the construction mayhem is an unfriendly welcome to most, the end result is something everyone will agree has been worthwhile.

Vivek Kumar ('01) feeds a bird while on the Spanish-Latino Club's trip to Spain. Even serious students such as Kumar appreciate every moment they have away from academics.

David Bulick ('02), Josh Sellers ('02), and Adam Elisha ('03) participate in their Chanukah Party. The Jewish Culture Club focuses on mixing Jewish customs of Chanukah with fun by having games and giving away Chanukah gelt, chocolate traditionally given on Chanukah.
West Side Story

Where does your average Cherry Hill East student go to assert his individuality? Often, he goes to one of the many culture clubs that East has to offer. Each club offers its own distinct taste to the buffet of Cherry Hill East. The Italian American Club sells Sicilian Pizza from an Italian bakery, a unique twist on an East tradition; the Jewish Culture Club holds holiday parties for every Jewish holiday incorporating Jewish customs with fun and games; the Spanish Latino Club has even held an exchange program to Spain. Vivek Kumar, '01) a Spanish-Latino Club member who attended the trip, said “I will never forget the trip to Spain; all of the new sites and events I had the chance to witness, including the bullfight, the new culture that I had the opportunity to be exposed to, and most of all the lifelong friends that I made created an unforgettable trip.” Trips such as this and the other activities run by the Culture Clubs make Cherry Hill East’s buffet even more appetizing.

Ms. Freedman stands with Adam Gottheim ('02) as they run their Chanukah-oriented Family Feud game at the Jewish Culture Club Chanukah party.

Pete Medina ('01) acts as the matador and Vivek Kumar ('01) the bull, as they reenact a scene from a Spanish bullfight while at a stadium in Spain. This summer, students in the Spanish department and members of the Spanish Latino Club visited Spain and hosted Spanish students during the fall.

Andy Lui ('01) and Diana Mark ('01) run an ACS meeting. As ACS is one of the most popular clubs in the school, their job can be very difficult.

Joy Illustre ('01) and Andy Lui ('01) sell pizza to raise money for their club, ACS. Pizza sales are not only an important way to raise money but also help to ease the students' wrath of hunger after a long day of school.

There's always strength in numbers. This year, when a few Vietnamese and Filipino students decided they wanted their own cultural clubs to represent them in school, they did the most logical thing: they went to the Asian Cultural Society officers and asked for help. This year, in addition to the Asian Cultural Society, there are five culture clubs representing East Asian cultures. Many members of one club go on to join the other five, even if they are not a member of that specific culture. The groups rarely, if ever, hold meetings at the same time, thus ensuring that all of the members can attend every meeting.

Listening attentively to the officers of his club, Michael Ko ('01) weighs the merits of two equally appealing options for the club as David Zhou ('01) gets up to speak.

One for All, All for One
Fennie Chow (’01) and Diana Mark (’01) put up posters for their club around the school. Without publicity, club members would miss important club meetings, events, and group pictures.

Kevin Yang (’01), Jao Illustre (’01), Diana Mark (’01), and Linda Chuong (’02) discuss upcoming plans at their ACS meeting. The group includes social events like dances in addition to service events where they give back to their community.
Mr. Nec. the department chair for math, speaks to an enthusiastic group of students at an Animal Rights Club meeting. At this meeting, Mr. Nec discussed the importance of keeping natural habitats clean in preparation for a park clean-up event that the group was planning.

Mrs. Varon, adviser of the Gay/Straight alliance, is discussing with Radha Modi ('01) about the issues related to homophobia. They were preparing a video for teachers on preventing the use of homophobic terms. The members of Gay-Straight Alliance recorded one of their discussions to make teachers and students more aware of how the use of homophobic terms make them feel.

AIDS AWARENESS: Jihoon Kim (President), Olivia Wu (Vice President), David Zhou (Community), Jim Lim (Treasurer), Meling Gao (Publicity), Justin Lin, Greg Laynor, Diana Mark, Fennie Chow, Charles Lim, Aysha Henderson, Ndudima Onieme, Jessica Cohen, Oleg Nudelman, Nicole Goldstein. Advisor: Mrs. Pauly.

Dana Supnick ('03) and Sara Sherman ('03) are selling pretzels to faculty and students to help raise money for Students Against Destructive Decisions. SADD helps students make wise decisions especially before big events such as the Sophomore Cotillion.
Knowledge Is Power

Olivia Wu ('02) and Jihoon Kim ('01) discuss plans for future meetings of the AIDS Awareness Club. The group participates in many activities to better the lives of those diagnosed with AIDS, including distributing food to extremely ill AIDS patients. Wu said, "On Valentine's Day, we planned a special party to distribute gifts to young AIDS patients."

Beth Smulyan ('01) discusses plans with Radha Modi, the president of the Gay-Straight Alliance. "Even though the Gay-Straight Alliance is a controversial club that many object to, the members realize how important it is to have a presence in the school," Modi said. "Our goal is to rid East of homophobia."
Ashley Gunther ('02) works with Adopt a Grandparent. This group spends Friday afternoons at geriatric homes visiting the residents. Many of the residents feel lonely without their families, and the high school students fill this void in their lives.

Rachel Hershenberg ('02), Sarah Fehder ('01), Shawn Kessler ('02), and Leigh Cohen ('01) volunteer their time to participate in Random Acts of Kindness. RAK upgrades events that help the community. One of their events was a senior citizen prom in which the members of RAK went to Marriott Assisted Living Center to dance with the residents.

Lauren Xenakis, Michelle Whalen, Laura Salmon, Diana Levit, and Erin Springer prepare for the upcoming FOP holiday party. The chairpeople work hard not only to prepare decorations for the party, but also guide other workers to ensure that all of the decorations help enhance the experiences of those attending the annual party.

Kim Pajdak ('03) and Jill Pahren ('03) help make decorations for the FOP Holiday Party. Each year, the Fraternal Order of Police runs a holiday party for children with special needs, and East students of all grades volunteer to help prepare run the party.

Patbun Hwang ('02) and Diana Tang ('02) enjoy volunteering at the Crafts Club visit to the Marriott Assisted Living Center. The club makes crafts from fundraising money and donates the crafts to the residents at the assisted living center.

CRAFT CLUB: Rachel Wu (President/Treasurer), Patbun Hwang (Vice President), Diana Tang (Vice President), Tiffany Yang (Secretary), Jennifer Ing (Publicity Manager), Shan Aagaq, Arny Chan, Stephanie Chang, Kristine Galermit, Su Hong, Melissa Medrowski, Amberen Naqui, Laskshmi Ravindran, Lisa Wang, Peggy Yang. Advisor: Mrs. Morgan.

Adopt-a-Grandparent, Craft Club, East Angels, FOP.
Dave Gelfand ('01) enthusiastically discusses the movie he just saw, "The Producers," with Andrew Cohen ('01) at a meeting of the Great Books and Movies Club. Nadya Lev ('01), president of the club, said "I think this is the best club in the school because we have no direct affiliation and we offer something for every student. We have many lively discussions and every member contributes."

Dorothy Ting ('01), Maria Shi ('01) and Christine Xu ('01) preside over a meeting of the International Affairs Club. "I founded this club to discuss current events that pertain not only to local affairs, but have a global significance and relate to us presently," said Shi.

DEBATE TEAM: Jon Sagot (Co-Captain), Gaven Watkins (Co-Captain), Priti Ojha, Josh Rissmiller, Oleg Nudelman (JV Chairperson), Srinath Vermuri, Greg Laynor, Neha Sawhney, Amanda Levy, Philip Osbourne, Adam Zell, Rachel Laskin. Advisor: Mr. Nation.

David Firestein ('01) presents his opinion to a group of eager members of Junior Statesmen of America, all of whom are ready to offer their own arguments. The club has discussed such important issues as gays in the military, legalization of drugs and affirmative action.

He Said She Said

Gaven Watkins ('01) and Diana To ('03) discuss upcoming events for TAG, Teens After God. Watkins said "Being in TAG has been a great experience for providing a place for religious discussion and expressing our rights of free speech."

Ms. Kenney, the advisor for the International Affairs Club, plans an upcoming meeting of the club. One of the highlights of the year of the International Affairs Club is its trip to the Model United Nations, where the group will represent one country in different committees dealing with important world issues such as the World Trade Organization and the environment.

International Affairs Club, Junior Statesmen of America, TAG
Anna Ly ('04) and Esther Kim ('04) contribute to the painting of a mural above the lockers at E-wing by the entrance of the school. Under the leadership of Abby Lichtman, the art club is available to any student who wishes to beautify the school. The club's projects include the two bathrooms around the corner from the cafeteria and the mural above the lockers in E-wing.

Jeremy Volkman ('01), Carlos Wang ('01), Alex Pollack ('02), and Ben Rozyn ('03) concentrate intensely on their computers. "We get together to solve problems using computer programming such as Basic and C++," said Volkman the unofficial captain of the team. "Many people may find this boring, but it really appeals to all of the computer geeks in the school."

The year was 2001. The place was the barely there corner room in front of the student entrance. Most editors were simply acquaintances or faces seen in the hall, except the two chiefs whose names were interchangeable.

The first couple of months, business was slow, except for 2 spunky editors who worked until all hours of the night negotiating Graduate matters. Once other matters (vbball) were attended, the two chiefs spent many afternoons in the office with the crew. The work was simple, but the attention spans were short.

Slowly the first few pages of each section were given the stamp of approval and sent to the printers. By the 3rd marking period the shocking news came from Shakespeare himself - most of the sections needed to finish or perhaps still start the spreads, in a short length of time. The deadlines were tough to meet, but with some white lies to help others; everyone had finished on time. Those next two month were hard and long. Casualties were high, but the end result made it worth the fight. Luckily team yearbook pulled through. No editor’s heads were severed. The team would like to thank all the Staff and Mr. Carr for their inspiration.
PERFORMING ARTS
D-wing. The long dark wing of Cherry Hill East that seems to extend into nowhere is probably one of the least known sections of East. With the mobs of people who are always rushing to this practice or that lesson, it’s no wonder that someone who isn’t a “regular” of D-wing can feel so overwhelmed and lost in the whirlwind of activity.

The wide variety of activities this single wing can offer to the student body is astounding. From Wind Ensemble to Chansons and from the Spring Show to Casual Harmony, students enrich themselves through their experiences. While other courses help students enrich their academic capabilities, the numerous music and drama electives not only allow students to take a break from the rigors of academics, but these electives also expand artistic horizons.

D-wing is truly the place to be for those with artistic dreams.

Sarah Daly ('01) looks intently at her music lit under the convenient stand lamp as she plays her flute. Daly, as a member of East’s Pit Orchestra, rehearses after school for hours with the cast of “Oliver” so that the lyrics and the accompanying music would match up perfectly during performances. “It’s a wonderful experience. It’s a lot of work, but the end results are worth it,” said Daly.

Joe Cucinotti ('01) and Dave Zhou ('01) lift the bells of their trumpets above their stands to make their entrance. Because they sit all the way in back of the stage, Cucinotti and Zhou must position themselves and their instruments so that the sound can carry to the farthest corners of the auditorium.

Hannah Plimpton ('03) runs through her part in “My Favorite Things” for Celebrations right before the Winter Concert. With the massive bass bells in her hands, Plimpton has the difficult job of handling them with both strength and coordination. “Playing the bass bells is a lot of fun, but it’s also a lot of work because they are so crucial in a piece,” said Plimpton.
As he raises his baton to conduct the downbeat of the next measure, Mr. Bruce Yurko cues a member of East's orchestra for an entrance. As the conductor of the highly acclaimed Wind Ensemble and the Orchestra, Mr. Yurko is one of the many teachers in D-wing who works just as hard as the students to achieve artistic perfection.

In this year's Spring Show, "Oliver," Jonathan Sagot ('01) and Sharon Goren ('01) play Mr. Bumble and Widow Corney. These two seniors have practiced long hours to perfect the flow of dialogue and the expression of emotions until they almost came naturally. The show's cast puts many long hours into practice so their performance will be flawless.

As stage lights focus on them, Lindsay Kancher ('02) and Dan Fox, one of the numerous elementary students in "Oliver," look out to the audience. After highly competitive auditions and nerve-wracking rehearsals, Kancher and the rest of the cast of "Oliver" have combined the talents of students of all ages to create another Spring Show that surpassed high expectations.

Christine MacArthur ('03) sings with confidence "O Bella Fusa" by Orlando di Lasso to the audience at the Winter Concert. MacArthur and the other members of Concert Choir know that this performance in front of parents, teachers, and peers is the ultimate climax after hours of tedious practices.
The sounds of harmonious voices resonate from the often intimidating D-wing. Often to the rest of the school, this wing is foreign, but to the singers of East, D-wing is the home of East’s four large choirs: Vocal Workshop, Chansons, Concert Choir, and East Singers. During the day, this wing is filled with the blending of many voices into one melody.

When entering the choral groups, all musicians must take Vocal Workshop before advancing to the other choirs. In this group, students are able to learn the rudiments of proper singing and music skills. At this basic level, they are able to start singing even without knowing how to read music. After the first year in Vocal Workshop, students can try out for Chansons, Concert Choir, or East Singers.

Although the choirs work hard to prepare for great performances, the members also have fun while they are learning because most are able to make many new friends in their choir. Because of the talent in the groups, they can perform entertaining songs such as “Smooth” by Carlos Santana in addition to performing for audiences in New York at this year’s annual trip.

Eve Michelecki ('03) and Serena Sun ('03) take a deep breath before hitting the first note of “Who Can Sail?” by Carl-Gentz Angeris. As members of Chansons, they know the importance of perfect pitch and correct breathing. “The key elements of singing are having good air support and looking ahead," said Sun.

Looking out to the audience, Holly Warschauer ('03) absorbs herself in the notes of “Zion’s Walls” by Aaron Copland. Only through daily practice and weekly lessons can singers know their music by heart.

Brian Cabalo ('03) holds a note as he watches Ms. Stowe for the cutoff. As a member of a large choir, Cabalo and others must always keep their eyes on the conductor for cues and the correct beat.

Vocal workshop is the first choir to perform. Dressed in red robes, Brittany Cohen ('04) finishes with a flourish as she joins in for the final chord of "The Galway Piper." All freshmen interested in a singing career at East must begin in this musical group.

During a Chanson's concert, Christine Forberger ('03), second from the right, pauses for a breath before continuing on to her next note. Breathing is one of the most important elements of singing because only correct breathing can produce full melodic notes.

There can only be one word that fully describes the music groups at East: dedication. From coming in before school to staying after school for hours of practice, these groups are unfaltering in their goal to provide musical enjoyment not only for themselves, but also for the audience.

The young six-year-old Celebrations starts off most of the concerts with a charming chime. All dressed in black, they do not sing but play well-known tunes for the audience.

Madrigals are the Renaissance-era group, consisting of eighteen talented people. The audience can see why they symbolize the birth of music; the Madrigals' rich tone definitely says it all.

The Belles of East must handle the rigors of playing the English hand bells while singing. Not only do they not have a conductor, the Belles, like Casual Harmony and the Madrigals, must learn to coordinate themselves with the other members.

Believing the all-male a Capella group, Casual Harmony sings a variety of music. From songs, such as "I Love My Boss" to popular ones that include pop songs by *NSync, they perform not only at East, but at other schools and at festivals as well.

As they pore over their music every week during practice, the members of the small groups prove that cooperation, dedication, and practice can lead to success. These highly selective music groups give the performance more variety and take music to a higher level.

When a musician doesn't even smile, it is obvious that her concentration level has reached a new high. Even though she faces her performance with seriousness, Paitun Hwang (‘02) enjoys playing for the audience in the fall, winter, and spring concerts. "Sometimes I find that Celebrations is a challenge but I still think playing bells is enjoyable," said Hwang.

There is much more to playing bells than participating in the Belles of East. While playing bells could be time consuming, Chris MacArthur (‘03) certainly enjoys the music. "Although playing bells can be stressful, through facial expression, it is obvious that it can be rewarding as well," said MacArthur.

BELLES OF EAST: Ande Adcock, Samitha Bhatnagar, Sarah Goldberg, Emily Joo, Ma Yu Li, Sara Linton, Chris MacArthur, Eve Michalski, Debra Seidel, Sara Sherman, Sarah Waxman, Elizabeth Welch, Christa Wesley, Claire Yoo, Laurie Steele (Advisor).

CELEBRATIONS: Melling Gao, Jade Goh (Conductor), Alice Hon, Paitun Hwang, Emily Joo, Christine Ku, Z.Liu, Chris MacArthur, Hannah Plimpton, Jing Tao, Holly Warshauer, Olivia Wu, Claire Yoo, Cindy Ferguson (Advisor).
Dressed in casual clothes, Casual Harmony entertains the audience with their hilarious song, "I Love My Boss." Trying hard not to laugh, they manage to keep perfect rhythm and perfect harmony along with perfectly straight faces.

It takes much coordination to be in small ensembles, especially in Madrigals. Because the members do not have a conductor, they must count by themselves to keep in time. Despite the difficulty, the members are still able to sing with expression and produce an outstanding performance.

Dressed up in elaborate Renaissance clothes, Rachel Leiberman ('01) sings out to the audience while holding hands with R.J. Weaver ('03). The Madrigals not only can sing, but they also can act using elaborate hand motions and facial expressions.

Counting is essential for the Celebration performers. Claire Yoo ('01) mentally keeps the beat while making her entrance in the piece, "All My Favorite Things." With hours of energy and time put into practice, the members of celebrations are able to enthral the audience with great music.

"Small ensembles consist of self expression, learning, and lots of fun."
D-Wing’s Buffet

There are many performing arts groups that students can voluntarily join. Orchestra, for example, practices daily during seventh period. Not only is it an entertaining class but it is also musically educational as well. Every Tuesday, orchestra has a free music class with Miss Fasso during certain periods of the day.

Other musical groups like the Brass Ensemble and Lab Band do not have a chance to practice during school. Brass Ensemble rehearses on Thursday, and Lab Band practices on Wednesdays after school. Each band has their own unique quality. While Brass Ensemble consists of only five members with only four different brass instruments, Lab Band has much more different instruments, such as bass, guitars, piano, drums, brass and woodwinds.

Finally, Performing Arts and Visual Students (P.A.V.A.S.) are not only musicians but also artists. This elite group of seniors is nominated by teachers. With this special privilege, P.A.V.A.S. manages to participate in many outside performances or shows.

Because of weeks of rehearsals, Nate Harlow (‘02), like the other cellist, have memorized most of their music. The most important thing to do, while playing whole notes, is to watch the conductor for the beats so they keep in time.
Standing the back of the orchestra, Greg Halbrook ('01), plays the bass, which is bigger than he is. The big instrument is crucial for the music because they provide the baseline of the orchestra. Without them, orchestra pieces would not sound as full.

Playing the guitar in lab band is hard work for Tetsuya Nakanishi ('04). Although it is easy to play the notes, it is difficult to strum so many strings with the thumb.

Barely using his music, Andy Wysong ('04) plays the drums by ear keeping the beat, for the lab band is an important job for the drummer. He not only keeps the beat for the band but he also adds a unique style to the music.

With only 5 members, Brass Ensemble consists of a trombone, two trumpets, french horn and a tuba. Anthony Kasinskas ('02) starts off the ensemble by giving the members the beat. Through hard work & concentration, Brass Ensemble can stay together without a conductor.

PAVAS: Danielle Lamburisky, Steven Podowitz, Emily Saitel, Nadia Lev; David Firestein, Marc Gramatges, Sam Rosenberg, Jon Sagat, Ron Goins, Chris Hartung, Sara Daly, Andrew Cohen, Liz Kaussner, Jenny Goldsmith, Rebecca Halperin, Marissa McKee, Sarah David, Kristin Merling, Scott Davis, Lisa Akinskas, Vanessa Reitig, Anna Wesley, Melissa Kalman, Dave Wolfe, Rebecca Gillespie, Rachel Lieberman, Devra Saidel, Sarah Goldberg, Britney Harris, Lindsay Dombrowski.
Looking attentively at the music, Emily Saidel (01) and Leah Plimpton (02) play their parts on the bassoon. It is important that each individual concentrates on playing their part and contributes their music to the whole group.

"Everyone talks about the discipline it takes to play a sport, but very few realize the dedication an instrumentalist needs to be a good performer. Playing in a band lets us interact with other musicians and learn the necessary techniques through various styles of music."

Breath control is an important part in playing brass instruments because it determines the pitch of the notes being played. Tuning by ear, Jordan Berg (02) listens to each note to determine how flat or sharp it is. Good tuning, whether in practice or in performance, is crucial for producing a full and harmonious sound.

Warming up before his performance, Justin Lin (04) spends some time with his friends Josh Stern (03) and John Li (03). Although some are nervous about performing on stage, most students can relax before the concert with their friends.

WIND ENSEMBLE: Lisa Akinlakas, Yasin Al-Sayyad, David Anderson, Adam Barsky, Jordan Berg, Dan Chou, Andrea Cornett, Joseph Cucinotti, Sarah Daly, Marc Davis, Antoinette Duffy, Polly Ehrlich, Jennifer Feinberg, Amanda Fishbane, David Fristin, Meiling Gao, James Gillespie, Rebecca Gillespie, Jade Goh, Alex Goldstein, Ariy Hadis, Mary Hu, Jillian Jimenez, Anthony Kakinlakas, Todd Kent, Chris Kewly, Jihoon Kim, Katie Klaussner, Bill Klein, Vivek Kumar, Stephen Lampropoulou, Hannah Plimpton, Leah Plimpton, Alan Reed, Matt Ross, Benjamin Ruder, Emily Saidel, Neal Samaddar, Aaron Satz, Sara Sherman, Paul Speckler, Douglas Tait, Andrew Thompson, Jeremy Volkman, Matthew Weinler, Kevin Yang, Tiffany Yang, David Zhou, Mr. Bruce Yurko (Conductor).

JAZZ BAND: Lisa Akinlakas, Dave Anderson, Josh Ascolon, Dan Chou, Andres Cotto, Sarah Daly, Marc Davis, James Gillespie, Alex Goldstein, Ariy Hadis, Seth Herron, Anthony Kakinlakas, Bill Klein, Vivek Kumar, Asher Ross, Devra Saield, Andrew Thompson, Jeremy Volkman, Julie Wagner, Matt Weinler, Kyle Widdowson, Mr. Timothy Kuhler (Conductor).
Looking forward to her first performance with the Wind Ensemble, Hannah Plimp-ton ('03) anxiously concentrates on her music. Because the highest degree of concentration is required, musicians cannot allow other distractions in their minds.

Band Montage

Everyday at Cherry Hill East High School, music fills the air in D-Wing. The familiar sounds of Jazz band, Freshman Wind Ensemble, Symphonic band, and Wind Ensemble provide a musical delight to anyone who happens to be passing by. These four bands, through many hours of practice, bring hours of pure listening pleasure to their audiences.

The winter and spring concerts are not created easily. Much hard work and patience are necessary to produce such spectacular results. All musical groups require daily practice during school, as well as devotion at home, totaling hours of work similar to that of an academic class.

As their concerts approach, the students work even harder to ensure that their performance at the concert surpasses everyone's expectations.

"Music is something I want to pursue the rest of my life. I love it and being around it all day makes my life happier," said Sarah Goldberg ('02). In years to come, many of these ambitious musicians will continue their passion for music after they leave East.

Dressed up in his tux for the concert, Adam Drelich ('04) as a member of the Freshman Wind Ensemble runs through the music right before the performance. Practicing right before the performance is essential for success.

Arriving early for their performance, the members for the Jazz Band meet in the auditorium to tune and prepare. Attendance and punctuality are crucial because every absence could ruin the musical effect of the band.

SYMPHONIC BAND:

FRESHMEN WIND ENSEMBLE:
When Oliver runs away, Sarah David ('02) discuss how disobedient he is. Tim Barnes (playing Noah Claypole) ('03) who is the real reason of the fight, pretends to be the "good boy" as he mops the stage floor.

Acting as Faigan, Sam Rosenberg ('01) creeps down the steps during a song in "Oliver." Because the stereotype of the antagonist is usually crooked and deformed, Rosenberg hunches his back and limps throughout the musical. His costume, such as his dark cape, black hat, and gloves also help portray him as the "bad guy" in the play.

While saying a humorous grace, Sam Rosenberg ('01) turns to speak to the audience. It takes much practice and skill not to laugh at the silly speech, and even the talented actors and actresses cannot help but smile.

Evan Weiss ('01) dips Rebecca Halperin ('01) while performing in the fall show, "You Can't Take It With You." Rebecca plays the role of Essie, a beginning dancer. However, she is an accomplished ballerina who has performed in "The Nutcracker." For such a skilful dancer, it is rather difficult to hide her talent as she dances.

Sara Linton ('02), playing Mrs. Bechwin, tries to persuade Clark Brown, as Oliver, to eat. Despite the age difference, the high school students interact well with the elementary students.

While saying a humorous grace, Sam Rosenberg ('01) turns to speak to the audience. It takes much practice and skill not to laugh at the silly speech, and even the talented actors and actresses cannot help but smile.

There is applause. The lights illuminate the stage while the audience anticipates the next scene. Now, the actors, singers, and orchestra combine to form an extraordinary performance. After all, the actors should be well prepared because of Hell Week. Practicing from right after school to eleven o'clock at night during the weekdays and from ten o'clock in the morning to ten at night takes much energy along with determination to put on spectacular shows. The thespians go through Hell Week twice a year to put on five performances each color cast for the fall and spring show.

Although the actors seem to be the only ones going through hell, other people behind the scenes deserve credit as well. For example, dance steps do not come naturally to most actors. Either a hired or voluntary choreographer stays at the grueling rehearsals to help the performers. Also, many students and parents take time to design and sew costumes, making the show as realistic as possible. Speaking of reality, the stage crew, as usual, did an outstanding job of making the set. And although moving the sets seem easy, it takes hours of practice and just the right timing to complete the job.

Thank you lighting technicians for staying alert during both practices and performances. Thank you pit orchestra for making the music come alive while the actors sing on stage. And last but not least, thank you thespians and directors for taking up much of your time, energy, and money to pull off remarkable shows each year.

Posed front and center of the stage, Emily Goldenthal ('01) acts as the main barmaid in "Oliver." After a few good drinks, the chorus grows tipsy enough to discover that "It's a Fine Life" after all.

SPRING SHOW: Clark Brown, Dan Fox, Sam Rosenberg, Adam Finkel, Scott Goldberg, Christin Milloti, Emily Goldenthal, Liz Klausner, Jon Sagot, Lindsay Dombrowski, Tori Cohen, Paul Spechter, Nolan Searles, Scott Davis, Rachel Karif, Sarah David, Rachel Lieberman, Sharona Gonen, David Wolfe, Tim Barnes, Zach Abo, J.P. Marching In Step

Whether in practice or in performance, the Cherry Hill East Marching Band always brings forth Cougar spirit. With flags waving, trumpets blaring, and drums rolling, the Marching Band members can always draw cheers from the crowd with their outstanding performances.

Under the leadership of the talented drum majors, Lisa Akinskas ('01) and Jeremy Volkman ('01), the Marching Band adds a unique flare to East's football games. Unlike previous years, the Marching Band has diverted from the traditional military marching style by adding a jazz theme.

These performances did not come together effortlessly. The members practiced many hours daily to pull off excellent shows at the games. Having begun the season before the school year even started, the members and the coordinate director, Mr. Keleher, devoted a large amount of time to coordinate the music and dance steps. As another season has passed with new memories, the members of the Marching Band look forward to even more innovative and imaginative performances next year.

The expression on Jen Shipon's ('04) face shows the immense dedication to the band. Many instruments, especially the flute, bring out the melody of the marching band. Her hard work, and that of other members, pays off during the wonderful performance.

Knowing his part by heart, Josh Rissmiller ('02) concentrates on playing his trumpet. As a dedicated member of the marching band, Rissmiller, like the other members, knows that only hard work and concentration can make a spectacular performance. "Marching really takes a lot of work but its worth it because it's a lot of fun during the games," said Rissmiller.

Andrew Bleaken, Deanna Burch, Adam Drelich, Molly Finkelstein, Fay Hughes, Dan Kober, Steven Kramer, Josh Levinson, Melissa Mock, Stephanie Mikotich, Jennifer Shipon, Adi Shmuel, Ruliam Takanashi, Andrew Wysong, Cierra Allen, Meghan Boland, Brian Cabalo, Alen Chao, Daniel Chou, Kim D'Imperio, Antoinette Duffy, Melissa Goldman, Curtis Hall, Alice Hon, Kristen Kindell, Justin Liu, Christine MacArthur, Lisha Mendelovici, Jill Pahre, Hannah Plimpton, Lauren Shetline, Doug Tait, Sam Tremble, Meenakshi Tripathi, Ana Aningalan, Naimi Baumgartner, Jordan Berg, Andres Coto, James Gillespie, Su Hong, Mary Hu, Anthony Kasinskas, Jessica Keilnass, Melody Joy Kramer, Lauren Mennes, Andi Mokloff, Lauren Morrone, Leah Plimpton, Josh Rissmiller, Asher Ross, Andrew Thompson, Julie Wagner, Lisa Akinskas, David Anderson, Evan Blau, Sarah Daly, David Firestein, Rebecca Gillespie, Chris Kewley, Bill Klein, Danit Maor, Heather Sabatino, Emily Saidel, Lauren Tyska, Jeremy Volkman
As she confidently holds her flute, Rebecca Gillespie ('01) and other woodwinds march perfectly in step toward the field. Only constant drilling during practice could keep unity during the performance. The whole band is able to keep up the school spirit by marching in step.

Along with the other members of the color guards, Alice Hon ('03) cheers for the football team. Practicing almost everyday after school, the color guards, while holding flags or poms poms, work hard to synchronize their movements.

Meeting challenging demands for perfection, Chris Kowley ('01) glances down at his music as he watches the conductor at the same time. As one of the members of the marching band, he encourages the football team with his spectacular performance on the saxophone.

Being one of the two drum majors, Jeremy Volkman ('01) keeps time for the marching band. Both as a leader and as a participant, it is essential that the drum majors attend every practice because the unity of the band depends on them.

As he enjoys the music, Steve Kramer ('04) reads ahead to keep up with the drum major's beat. Not only do the xylophone players help maintain the rhythm, but they add extra flavor to the jazzy music.

Playing the clarinet, Addie Shumel ('04) lines up in a row with the other woodwind players. Part of the marching band’s duty is to march in line, keep good posture, and most of all, concentrate on their music.
The Madrigals hit the road once again in a bus before another performance. Anticipation is high as they relax by joking around.

Not wearing their usual Renaissance costumes, the Madrigals get into the holiday spirits at a local nursing home. Their rich, melodic Christmas carols are often the delightful highlights of local holiday parties.

ALL SOUTH JERSEY CHOIR: David Rabizadeh, Arin Sang-Urai, Kristin Luchtman, Kirsten Burkhardt, Raj Sarkar, Brian Cabalo, Andrew Bleaken, Eve Michaelski.

ALL STATE CHOIR: Dave Rabizadeh, Arin Sang-Urai, Kristin Luchtman, Kirsten Burkhardt, Sara Linton, Rachel Lieberman, Sarah Goldberg.

ALL SOUTH JERSEY HONORS: Yao-Chung King, Olivia Wu, Rachel Wu, Jennifer Tan, Julie Wagner, Leah Plimpton, Andre Bleaken.
Many musicians at East strive to share music as often as possible. For these students, even extracurricular activities don’t end at 4:15 pm. The Madrigals, for example, travel around South Jersey to introduce the community to Renaissance music. With their extravagant costumes and harmonious voice, the Madrigals cheer up people at nursing homes, and lighten the mood at bookstores and at festivals.

Many musicians also choose to test their musical abilities against others by trying out for state and national honors every year. With the community available at the feet of East’s musicians, expanding in any direction is possible.

Scott Davis ('01) runs through some scales before the performance at Barnes and Noble. With their musical talents, the Madrigals love to share their unique Renaissance music with the South Jersey community.

With linked hands, members of Madrigals proudly show the audience at the Renaissance Fair their musical talents. Participation in such local events outside of school gives the Madrigals a chance to perform before different types of audiences.

Jen Tan ('02), Enoch Hsieh ('04), and Yao-Chung Kung ('02) practice for their performance at the Cum Laude inductions. As the members of East’s orchestra, their participation in this quartet allows them even more opportunities to express themselves musically.

JAZZ STANDARDS: Adam Barsky, Alex Goldstein, Jeremy Volkonan, Julie Wagner, Matt Weiner.
ATHLETICS
Football: Accomplishments — Wins over Bishop Eustace and Cherry Hill West; Highlights — 24-6 win over West. Over 400 yards of total offense, Gave up only 37 yards to West, won back the D. Bart Boot Trophy ...

Girl's Cross Country: Accomplishments — 3rd in Camden County Championships, Won more medals this year than any other year in school history; Highlights — Beat Triton and Edgewood on the same day.

Getting ready to kick off to the opposing team, East opens the football game in full force. After months of practicing, the team's hard work reflects on the field during a high-pressure game against West. With fierce completion between the two teams, every player looks forward to that Thanksgiving Day game.

“We got the spirit! Come on let's hear it,” chants Lauri Silnitzer ('01), encouraging the football team to aim for victory. As a senior cheerleader on the squad, she is responsible for leading the rest of the cheerleaders in motivating the players on the field. “Cheering the past four years has been an unforgettable experience,” Silnitzer said.

Going The Extra Yard

The seniors of the girl's cross-country team unite to encourage one another during their individual struggles for victory. In dedicating many hours to the team the past four years the girls have become not only teammates, but also good friends. Rachel Gordon ('01), Neely Elisha ('01), and Tali Elisha ('01) have created a bond that will outlast the conclusion of their final cross-country season at East.

Football at Cherry Hill East not only encompasses physical strength, but also team spirit and a sharp mental edge. To get the players' adrenaline pumping, the cheerleaders and fans show their support with inspiring banners and enthusiastic chants. With such motivation, the players find the vigor necessary to B-E aggressive on the field.
Aiming For The Goal

Lauren Meier (‘01) beats her opponent to the ball with a focused look and a clear mind. The key to dominating on the field is to never lose sight of the ball. The girls work hard to keep up with the speed of the game every day by practicing for many hours after a long day at school.

Depending on their coach for guidance and support, Michele Whalen (‘01) and Kim Fein (‘01) await a few words of wisdom. Some motivation from the coach helps the girls focus better and try harder before a game. “Sometimes it is hard to concentrate on the field because of school, but the coach encourages us to get energized for a win,” said Whalen.

Daniel Lewis (‘02) gets ready to pass the ball. Since, soccer is a team sport, it is important to depend on your teammates for support on and off the field. “Most of the team has been playing together since the age of eight, so we know how to interact on the field. We have the chemistry which is why we excel,” said Lewis.

Suspended in the air, Matt Acciani ('02) takes charge of the ball as he speeds away from his opponents. Swift movements and quick feet are a key part of soccer. Acciani said, "The game is really fast in high school, so you have to know where to pass before you even get the ball."

Iris Goldstein ('01), with the look of a tiger in her eyes, prepares to conquer the ball before her opponent even gets a chance to wink. Goldstein has been a committed, dominant player on the field for four years. "We learned that if we played with intensity and always gave one hundred percent, we would come out winners regardless of the final score," she said.

Michael Morrow ('01) commands on the field as he prepares to score a goal at a home game. His mind and body collaborate to endure the strenuous game of soccer. Morrow and his teammates work hard to physically prepare themselves for the high pressure games.

Concentration? Anxiety? Disappointment? A look that contains almost all of these emotions is a facial expression that every player exhibits during the season. Michael Kline ('02) focuses on a coach's pep talk while thinking about how to correct his mistakes and to dominate on the field.

Field Hockey, Boy's Soccer
The mental aspect is almost as important as the physical part of any game. Jennifer Brown ('01) discusses strategies with her coach, Mr. Ipri, so that she can apply them to her upcoming match. His guidance and reassurance provides her with the motivation necessary to dominate on the court.

Volleyball is a game of intense pressure. Nicole Pressel ('01) strains every muscle in her body to conclude a vigorous point with a remarkable spike. Pressel said, "Even though there are a lot of outside pressures from the coach and the team, it is important to clear your head and focus on placing the ball in the weakest spot on the opposing side."

Preparing to assist the ball to an offensive hitter, Inna Fabrikant ('01) centers on a momentous aspect of the game. To win the point, every player on the court must contribute to delivering the perfect pass, set or spike. Once all three steps come together, the result is a triumph that every member of the team can partake in.

Cathy Girman ('02), a Varsity player on the girl's volleyball team, focuses on making a precise pass to her teammates. During a key defensive moment, concentration is crucial. Each player, clear-minded and determined, brings to the court an important part of the upcoming point that will eventually lead to East's sweet victory.

Coach: Mr. Ipri.

Heads or tails? The captains of the girl's volleyball team await the fate that is to be determined by the toss of a coin. In a game that could go either way, every little bit of assistance can assure a win. Even a simple benefit like winning the coin toss can result in uplifting the spirits of the players on the court.

Good form is an important part of any game. In tennis, the key to dominating in a match is to concentrate on the perfect placement during every point. Alanna Herman ('01) plays through with her backhand as she watches the ball land triumphantly on her opponent's side of the net.

Concentration is not only a requirement in the classroom, but on the field as well. Jackie Russ ('01), while stretching before the game, collects her thoughts to gain an extra mental edge. "Sometimes, it is important to relax my mind and release stress before a difficult game," Russ said.

Juniors, Amanda Kravitz ('02) and Kristen Hummel ('02) concentrate on the ball while winding up for a shot on goal during a game. The sport of soccer does not afford the offense many shots during a game, so each opportunity cannot be wasted. The shooter must practice hard in order to place and power the ball well during games.

A Step Ahead
The East boy's cross-country team comes together during a meet in front of many other competitors. Even though cross-country is an individual sport, seeing a teammate running by one's side motivates a runner to push harder. Finishing in the front along with fellow team members raises team spirit.

At the end of a long run, cross-country team members must make a final push toward the finish line. Rob Koslow (‘01) springs past several competitors to complete the race. “With my adrenaline pumping, I am able to push myself to the extreme despite exhaustion from an already strenuous race,” said Koslow.

Girl's Soccer: Accomplishments — Coaches' Cup Quarterfinals, South Jersey Semifinals, Cutest Girl's Team in New Jersey; Highlights — Beating Shawnee 2-0, Beating Lenape, Winning in penalty kicks against the #1 ranked team, Absegami, in the States' Tournament, Entire team are friends...

Boy's Cross Country: Accomplishments — Best season in 8 years, Ranked 12th in South Jersey, 33rd in the Camden County Championships Highlights — Beating West and placing 7th in the Group IV Championships, Don Witzig's 200th victory in coaching. Andy Lui was East Boy's Runner of the Year.

Kristen Cargen (‘02), the East girl's soccer team goalie, makes a diving save to prevent a goal. Soccer is as much a game of defense as it is of offense, and the goalie is the last obstacle in front of a goal. The goalie must often make physical sacrifices in tumbling over the field but the joy of making crucial saves is immense.

East boy's cross-country Runner of the Year, Andy Lui (‘01), takes a trip around the school during the rigorous practice. Without the pressure of competition, the cross-country team uses practices to hone fundamental skills, improve conditioning, to prepare for the five-kilometer run, and develop running strategies.

Katie Boyle (‘02) prepares to launch a pass after darting past several defenders. One of the most difficult aspects of soccer is developing good ball control. Because of the speed of the game, the players on the field must be able to make skilled ball maneuvers.

GIRL'S BOWLING: Christine Duncombe, Rachel Herman, Lauren Morrone, Nicole Robinson, Maria Stolyar. COACH: Ed Vranich

To get a strike, a bowler must rely on good form when releasing the ball down the lane. Rachel Herman ('03) concentrates on positioning and rotating her body properly in order to get a strike and secure the victory for East.

Lauren Morrone ('02) and other members of the bowling team watch as the ball rolls quickly down the lane. While bowling is an individual sport, team support is fundamental to having the mental edge over opponents.

Like any basketball team, the Cougars must rely not only on inside shots, but also on jumpers. Here, bacon Mitchell ('01) follows through after taking a three-pointer from the corner. The key to making such long distance shots is good form and concentration, both of which are stressed in practice.

Having good ball control and passing is one of the most important aspects to succeeding offensively on the basketball court. Here, Roberto Weiss ('02) looks for an open teammate while keeping the basketball out of reach of a defender. Passing allows for faster ball movement, which helps create scoring opportunities.
As basketball involves five players on the court at once, it is vital for a player to be able to cooperate with his teammates. In order to do so, players must develop an ability to communicate with the others, and know where they are on the court. Andy Schwartz’s ('01) eyes browse the court for open teammates as he charges up the court.

Taylor Regis ('02) focuses ahead on coordinating her motions with the other cheerleaders on the squad. The East cheerleaders practice synchronizing all of their chants and routines in order to energize the crowd and encourage the players in the game.

Applying all of her internal energy into each stroke, Lauren Scarpato ('04) mentally focuses on beating her opponent. No matter how heavy her arms feel or how tired her legs are, losing only a second of concentration could potentially cost the team a loss. With such pressure on her shoulders, giving up is not an option.

Trying to hold down his opponent and not give him a second of rest, Bobby Murrur ('02) puts all of his strength into the last few minutes of the match. As an underclassmen, he puts just as much effort into each move as his older teammates.

Alexis Ettinger ('01) concentrates on the race as she counts underwater for her teammate Erica Weitz ('01). Although the majority of the sport focuses on individual success, all of the girls on the East Swim Team agree that working together to achieve an ultimate victory for the school feels just as gratifying.

MANAGER: Cheryl Billy. COACH: Mr. Wright.
Courtney Kayser ('04), a member of the East Diving Team, executes an awe-inspiring 10.0. To reach a certain level of skill and grace, divers must practice at achieving perfect timing in addition to all of the artistic requirements associated with diving.

Girl’s Swimming: Accomplishments — Record 12-1, Won Girl’s League Championship, Won Coaches’ Invitational Championship; Highlights — Won 47 meets in a row from 1997-2001 including 4 straight State Championships.

Planning his course of action, Adam Wolosky ('01) anticipates his opponent’s first move. Plenty of training and hard work help East wrestlers defeat opponents with quick moves and Herculean strength.

As a sophomore, Jason DiNapoli enjoys an even sweeter taste of victory at the end of his match. DiNapoli shows that he still has a lot to offer in the next two years of his wrestling career at East due to his athletic accomplishments thus far. Casey Walter ('01) sets a good example for his teammates by winning the match.

Pinning his opponent to the mat, Justin Ensign ('03) waits for the referee to call the count. A sport that has the potential to change in a millisecond, wrestling depends upon the high skill and agility of each wrestler in the ring.

Brian Klimberg ('03) exerts all his energy as he pins down his opponent. Grueling practices that include weight lifting, jump roping, and running pay off as East wins one match after the next. Athletic groups such as the wrestling team bring pride to East with constant victories.
Fierce concentration permeates Justin Baratz ('03) as he pieces together the steps of an ideally maneuvered strike. Since so many details combine to achieve success in bowling, perfect form is as crucial for a bowler as pitch is for a singer.

Fan's watch as Margo Buchalski ('03) steers away from her opponent to gain advantage over the court. As a point guard, Buchalski's mission is to seek out open teammates in order to find the most guaranteed shot. The East girl's basketball team agrees that even though Margo is only a sophomore, she is an excellent asset to the Varsity team.

Knocking 'Em Down

Rachael Cohen ('01) quickly decides to pass the ball to another player as she feels trapped in-between opponents. Decision-making dominates a large part of basketball since the sudden decisions of each player decide the final outcome of the game. As a captain of this year's team, Cohen feels this pressure most of all.

In the midst of calling out to her four teammates, Knatt Kligerman ('02) refuses to give up the ball to an opponent. Basketball is an extremely intense game during which even one lost second of time could result in heavy consequences. The East girl's team excels at fighting until the final buzzer.
No time to panic! Jhanie Zhargam’s (’02) eyes search for one of her teammates while she concentrates on keeping the ball out of the hands of her opponent during an extremely stressful situation. “Staying cool and mentally anticipating the next move eliminate any problems on the court,” said Zhargam.

Suspended in the air, Lauren Butler (’02) releases the ball aiming for the basket. A successful shot means just the right ball speed and body alignment. With only milliseconds of preparation for each shot, this process turns into an intense moment for the team as well as for the cheering fans.

Boy’s Bowling:
Accomplishments — 2nd Team All Conference - Matt Robinson; Highlights — Beating Cherry Hill West 4-0; Good parent support at home and away games all year.
Taking his final breath of the race, Brian Radziwill ('03) pushes his hardest and anticipates reaching the ultimate destination - the pool's edge. For a swimmer, every nanosecond counts and knowing that the competition is one lap over only forces an individual to kick harder and pull faster.

John Mittleman ('04) contributes to the team in the medley relay by getting his backstroke off to a strong start. In swimming, every point counts and it is essential that every team member does his part in order for the team to reach ultimate victory.

After winning the 2001 State Championship, captain Scott Scheeyer ('01) celebrates the glamorous trophy: "It was amazing to finally win the championship as a senior. I am totally proud of this team," Scheeyer said.

A Captain's Corner - An Interview with Rob Van Brunt ('01)

How did the team react after last year's disappointing loss?

After our final meet last season, we were devastated. It came down to the last race and Westfield just beat us. It took us a while to recover, but we knew we had to prepare for the next year. Every person dedicated himself to getting faster for next season.

What were the expectations for this year from the coach and each other?

As soon as the season started, every guy on the team had the same goal: to get back to the finals. At our first practice, Coach Wood let us know his expectations for this season: to bring home a championship trophy.

Which meet stands out in your mind?

During the regular season, we only had one close meet. We beat Haddonfield by 4 points. At the end of the season, The Philadelphia Inquirer chose it as the meet of the year. Looking back, this meet helped us to understand the importance of all swimmers in every event. The 3rd swimmer is just as important as the other two.

So, what happened at the playoffs?

In the first two rounds of the playoffs, we beat Rancocas Valley and our rival Shawnee very easily. Seeing how we all came together against Shawnee, we knew that we had an excellent chance to win it all. We had to wait to see whom we were swimming against — Westfield or Bridgewater. Although Bridgewater was heavily favored, Westfield swam incredibly and upset them.

How did you prepare for the finals and how did the team expect to finish in the finals?

Looking at Westfield's times, we anticipated the meet to come down to two points. Our team met the day before the meet to discuss our line-up and what to expect out of every single member of the team. This meet would test whether or not the team could unite to perform as one.

How did everyone feel right before the meet?

Our bus ride on the way to the meet consisted of tension and excitement. I could tell immediately that everyone was going to swim his fastest, but I could not predict how well Westfield was prepared. After warm-ups, our team gathered around and screamed our heads off to pump up the muscles and release the energy.

What was the overall flow of the meet? Was the team ready to win?

As the meet began, I could tell from the first event that we were more than ready to blow away the competition. Our relays placed 1st and 3rd, much better than expected. The rest of the meet continued in a similar fashion. Race after race, someone on our team reached farther than his opponent and ultimately swam his best ever.

Did all of your hard work pay off at the end and how did you celebrate the sweet victory?

After the final relay, the scoreboard read 101-69 and screams of jubilation culminated our year long quest for the championship. The 3 seniors accompanied Coach Wood and Coach Knouse to receive the State Championship trophy. The underclassmen then joined us in throwing the coaches in the water in celebration. Our team posed for pictures, holding each other up from exhaustion. Every person gave everything in order to prevail in this final meet.

What does it mean to you to have achieved this goal your senior year as captain?

Looking back, I could not think of any other way to complete my high school swimming career. After coming so close to victory last year, it makes me appreciate more how much dedication it took in order to win it all. These last 4 years, I have formed thousands of memories, but none more satisfying than being a part of the team that set out to win it all and came home with the Championship trophy in the end.
The Final Seconds

Concentrating on the ball, Kyle Grabhka ('03) prepares to putt on the green.

Rachel Sherman ('01) takes a break during an intense game.

Laria Terry ('03) gathers all of her strength to launch the javelin as far as she can.

Frank Chang ('01) elevates himself off the ground while powerfully swinging at the ball.

Elena Medina ('02) looks to run around yet another base during a softball game.

Dan Butler ('02) gets ready to catch the ball and make a quick play on the baseball field.

Brendan Borowski ('01) and Jared Peltzman ('01) chat during a break from javelin practice.

Icing On The Cake

Katie Boyle ('02) maneuvers around an opponent during a home lacrosse game.

Mike Cukich ('02) follows through after delivering a powerful swing on the ball.

Ian Richman ('01) concentrates on the ball as he looks for a volley at the net.

Aiming For Success

Education is the building block toward a successful life. Nothing can be more important than getting an education especially for the students at East. Its hard work and sometimes a pain, but the students here strive for excellence. Around the school, students can be seen diligently working in classes. Calculating in math, learning pronunciation in foreign language, reading a novel in English, and comprehending science; these are some of the things students at East try to perfect. Not only do students work hard all day; they stay after 3'o clock to learn more. Its no wonder why East is such a great place to get an education. Along with academics, students find time to join clubs like the Adopt-Grandparent and Key Club. These are not just ordinary clubs but ones that give back to the community. Students don't only care about their grades but others as well. They spend time with the elderly at the hospital, making them feel they still have a purpose in life. Also, the students help around in communities that are in bad shape. The students are more than scholars, they're the future and coming from East it's safe to say the future is looking bright.

Eagerly sharing homework solutions, Michelle Tseng ('01) and Roberto West ('02) compare answers from their homework to obtain the best possible scores in math class. Comparing homework is an effective way for students to understand difficult problems. Additionally, it allows students to gain more experience with study skills by helping one another.
Escaping the chaos of noisy study halls and classrooms, Lauren Plevinsky ('02) chooses an unlikely location to study for a test - the intersection. Most of the time, the stairwells are filled with a plethora of students, but today Lauren finds the much-needed solace of studying in complete isolation from the rest of the school.
Digital Mania

Technology Story
The bell rings. You hurry into your first period Physics class. As you scramble into your seat, you suddenly remember that today is a lab day. That means you'll be using the computer to collect data for an experiment. You heave a huge sigh of relief as you gratefully think to yourself that at least there's a computer to do all the dirty work. This situation not only describes a typical science lab, but it also defines all other academic classes in school. Every classroom not only provides computers or technological devices that benefit students in class work, but also a source of learning and entertainment. In recent years, advances in technology have exploded in our society by creating a more convenient and simple method to get around in life. As a result, the concept of modern technology has been adopted in our everyday school lives to allow students to perform complicated science labs, to process film, to interact with one another, and to accomplish a myriad of other functions.

Steven Chew ('03), and Joshua Kanoff ('03) share a laugh as they surf the web for amusement during their routine school day. The Internet has proved to be a valuable source of information to many students with just one touch of the mouse. However, the worldwide web also offers a massive variety of entertainment, from chatting to downloading music.

Peering intently into a video camera, Alberto Salcedo ('02) uses a digital device in Broadcasting to film scenes of a typical classroom. Major development in filming technology has enhanced picture quality and convenience in productions without the troubles of long delays in shooting. Perhaps filming in the future would become even more convenient, instead of manual equipment, most filming devices would be automatic.

By utilizing bold shapes and colors in her artwork, Lauren Haff ('01) produces a creative depiction of herself in her self-portrait. In Foundations of Art, students are required to sketch and then paint a portrait of themselves by using their own interpretations. Many students portray themselves in abstract angles or asymmetric designs. Yet, Haff's own self-portrait defines herself as being a girl of vivacity.

Jill Greenfield ('03), Ashley Perkins ('03), Danielle Fouch ('03) and Jennifer Hacker ('03) work together in a small group to produce papier-mâché designs. Art class not only improves communication between the girls, but also allows each of them to better familiarize one another by working collectively. By working as a team, the girls often come up with new ideas and offer one another suggestions on how to improve their artwork and which colors look best together.
Artistic Expressions

At the ring of the bell, students bustle into a large classroom in F-wing. Far from the average high school class, the room contains a plethora of supplies and devices absent from typical classrooms. Instead of quietly sitting in designated seats, students hurry towards the back of the room to accumulate the supplies needed for that day. This scenario displays the everyday actions of an art class. Art classes in school have redefined the role of art in the lives of many students. Liz Solomon ('04) states, "Foundations of Art class has helped me understand artistic techniques, and it has taught me the color variations of the world." Aside from techniques and color variations, Foundations of Art classes have taught students abstract concepts such as contrast, shading, color mixtures, and painting techniques. Meanwhile in 3-D Art, students are taught complex methods of ceramics, papier-mâché, and pottery. Over the years, art courses have played a significant component in many students' lives by allowing them a forty-minute time period to sit and relax, while expressing their feelings and emotions through artwork.

Providing her full attention to her sculpting, Lindsay Gucciardi ('03) carefully designs her clay vase into an object of perfection in 3-D art. Although the process involves getting dirty and exerting much effort to achieve the perfect creation, Gucciardi thoroughly enjoys the hard work as she displays a smile of satisfaction at the sight of her handiwork.

Meticulously fixing a portion of her picture, Lauren Tyska ('01) quietly contemplates how to enhance the skeleton on her canvas to have an even better visual effect on her audience. For many students, painting may seem simple. But Tyska knows that to produce a truly successful piece of art, she will have to plan her pictures on factors such as light and shadow, color, and contrast.

Taking advantage of a beautiful day, Abby Lichtman ('01), uses the outdoors as a subject for her artwork. The art classes at East offer a great opportunity for students, like Abby, to escape from the usual classroom setting, and see different aspects of art. Commercial Art, Foundations of Art, and 3D Art are just a few of the many classes that are offered to meet the different ability levels of the students.

The journey to a successful high school education can be very exhausting. Day after day students are learning new vocabulary for English, formulas for Science or Math, and facts about History, all of which can be grueling. Acquiring new knowledge and comprehending it at the same time leaves many students tired and fatigued. So after a long day's work, students find ways to release their stress from school. Students of East can be seen relaxing during study hall even though they should be studying. But all work and no play seem unfair. Other students chat-chats during lunch periods about how their day is going and some even find Physical Education relaxing. However many students await for the 2:25 bell which lets them know school is over and the fun begins. The students at East are assiduous workers and have earned a well deserved relaxation from school to do anything they want besides work.

Greg Lichtman ('03), and George Schlasinger ('03) work on their small groups while discussing an English book. Instead of viewing the book in a serious manner, the two students choose a more laid-back attitude in their group discussion. For many people, a more relaxed approach on schoolwork presents not only a more effective method to accomplish work, but also a better way for one to feel more at ease with others classmates.

Vicki Fleminglos ('03) and Beth Ann Thompson ('01) find a secluded corner of their science room to take a short rest while discussing the week's latest events in school. For the girls, this is one of the few moments in the hectic school day to actually kick back and chat about something entertaining without having to worry about tests, and grades.

In a quiet study hall, Michelle Azcona ('03) and David Schneider ('03) silently peruse through magazines and books. Some students such as Azcona and Schneider use study hall to provide a break from the day, while others work diligently throughout the period to decrease the amount of homework they must bring home with them each night. Study hall provides a great opportunity for students to read, study, or simply enjoy a break from their difficult classes.

Enclosed in the noisy and chaotic lunchroom, Charlotte King ('03) finds a way to study her vocabulary notes while eating lunch. Although her surroundings provide difficult conditions for studying, King manages to endure the loud chatter and laughter as she concentrates on her vocabulary. For most students, lunch is a period to just lay back and relax with friends during the long school day. Nevertheless, the cafeteria also manages to provide an area for those who wish to

Just after taking a grueling test, Samantha Zweben ('01) and Natalie Gleimer ('01) anxiously await for the bell to ring. As they wait, Zweben and Gleimer make use of this much-appreciated time by looking at a magazine. After a stressful test, students always look forward to a time when they can relax, even if it is only for a few minutes.
It's Not Rocket Science

From dissecting fetal pigs in Biology to measuring frequency in Physics, students at one point in their high school career must take at least one year of lab science. Lab sciences in high school play a substantial role in providing students with hands-on experience in major science courses. Instead of listening to the usual monotonous science lectures, students gain more insight on the topic, as well as learn to grasp the concepts better in labs. Even though science labs may seem difficult at first, with the right amount of hard work and instruction, labs can be a fulfilling high school experience. Lab students are involved in numerous innovative labs such as fly labs in Biology, dissection in Human Anatomy, soil testing in Environmental Studies, and chemical experimentation in Chemistry. Although lab courses occupy lunch periods and elective courses, they are definitely worth the sacrifice each week in allowing students more insight in their selected science courses.

In a Physics lab, Harry Rose ('01), Rick Gold ('02), and James Ernst ('02) figure out how each piece of equipment works together to make up the entire lab. Once they get past the setup of the lab, they work together to find a way on how the weights and carts combine together in order to obtain data. In science labs, teamwork is crucial because there is input from more people in the lab, as well as an increased efficiency in accomplishing the lab.

Mr. Berryann patiently assists Brian Bussey ('02), as he tries to grasp the concept of finding data in the Pasco Science program during a Physics lab period. Mr. Berryann teaches each step of the lab to his student, hoping that his guidance will help his student understand the criteria better. Although physics labs are difficult to comprehend at first, they become easier through guidance from teachers and experience from students.
By diligently constructing a molecular model in Chemistry, Matt Pagan ('03) and Josh Waldorf ('03) learn to apply abstract thinking to their task. While learning the molecular composition of a compound is important for Chemistry students, emphasis on abstract thinking is just as substantial. In many science courses, teachers make use of lab periods to encourage students to think about complex topics.

During an Environmental Studies lab period, Sara Linton ('02) and Deora Seidel ('01) use effective procedures to determine soil composition. The main purpose of the lab is to use scientific methods, as well as scientific equipment to discover if the soil is suitable for growing fruits and vegetables. Many science classes like Environmental Studies utilize the importance of procedural methods to prepare students for jobs and experiences in the future.
As Matt Pezzato ('03) and John Mittleman ('04) diligently measure models in Drafting, they learn the basic rudiments of architectural and mechanical structures in technology. The course not only provides knowledge in constructing mechanical drawings on paper, but also provides students useful insight on a possible occupation in the future.

Marissa Fang ('02) records beneficial information after observing minuscule microorganisms from a powerful microscope in Biology. Invisible to the human eye, microorganisms represent an entire different world of complex cell formations and diverse systems that make up the cell. When observed, students like Marissa enter this unique world of tiny microorganisms.

With the advances in technology & the internet, computers have found their way into the homes and classrooms of East students. While computer can be used in the classroom for research and data processing, many students also use their computers at home to connect with their friends all over the world.

During a free period, Jason Mitchell ('04) stares intensely ata picture file on the computer monitor. He ponders which task to perform next on his project. Jason has learned many different skills on the computer and with this knowledge, now prepares to finish his work. The computer has helped many people quickly perform tasks, which used to take days. For students, having this technology makes everyday life easier.
Sharper Image

As we begin the millennium, the age of endless achievements, Cherry Hill East has also begun to achieve its goal by remodeling the school. All around school, new classrooms and science labs can be seen installed. But the building itself is not the only thing being updated, the students at East have been one step ahead in using the best updated instruments. Microscopes for science labs have helped students understand how small life can be in this world and computers have furthered the resources of the world with one click of the mouse. Students at East have taken advantage of the technical equipment to benefit their life for the future. The technology at Cherry Hill East has improved year after year, ensuring the students receive the best tools for their education.

Carefully examining the computer system, Mr. Dodulik assists Michael A. Ferland (‘01) on understanding each component of the complex system. Under his instruction, Michael learns not only the basic make up of the mechanism but also understands how each part is repaired for further use. In our day and age when a huge percentage of machinery operates by systems and technology, it is beneficial for one to be knowledgeable in the field.

At the start of the school day, you stand waiting for the first bell to ring to signal the beginning of homeroom. As you are waiting, you suddenly notice the presence of several elementary school children walking alongside high school students. Curiously you wonder what possible reason there is for children to be present in high school and you ask the person next to you the question on your mind. They respond by saying, “It’s Child Development Day for the Psychology students.” Child Development Day is not just a regular day in high school, but instead it represents a day of fun and creativity for many Psychology students. During that specific day, students use imaginative activities to test their hypotheses of personality in children in order to complete their experiments. However, Child Development Day is not the only example of innovative approach to schoolwork. Activities such as field trips, in-class presentations, and group interactions also present another twist in accomplishing the laborious, difficult schoolwork. Not only are these activities exciting, but are also rewarding in knowing that the work is actually completed without a lot of exertion. Who ever said school couldn’t be fun?

Chris Marasco ('01) conscientiously tests a child on Child Development Day in order to obtain results for his research topic in Psychology. Because Child Development Day happens only once a year, both students and participants are eager for the day to arrive when Psychology students finally have an excuse to bring in children. As a result, students are able to determine personality and cognitive aspects of development by creating original experiments for children to take.
Standing outside Johnson Elementary School, William Welker ('01) proudly represents an exemplary role model for younger children when he participates in a child development class. On that special day, Welker dresses as Dr. Seuss' "the Cat in the Hat" to encourage younger children to value education and read. During his experience, he teaches children the importance of education while he acquires a new learning experience for himself in providing a positive influence for children.

Gintare Zehnke (03), Rosanna Visciglia (03), Andrea Mykett (03), and Sydney Reyes (03) attentively work together in observing the skeletal structure of an organism in Biology. Their objective is to observe the system, then formulate descriptions on what the organism could possibly be based on their observations. The activity represents a more creative approach to Biology by using visual aids for learning and utilizing a group atmosphere to learn.

Scott Thomson (02), and Dan Lewis (02) carefully arrange reference papers for their History presentation. During that particular period, the teacher briefly hands over the class to the students for their oral presentation. In their presentation, they provide their fellow classmates with valuable information that may appear on a future test. Oral reports not only indicate the amount of knowledge a group of their topic, but also provide students with an opportunity to interact with the class.
Sharing a moment of spare time in their hectic schedule, Vi Nguyen ('02), Cadence Court ('01), Lauren Goldlust ('03), and Su Hong ('02) excitedly discuss the day's events in the guidance office. While most students go to the guidance office for the sole purpose of advising and counseling, many students decide to go there to peruse through the abundant bookshelves of college guidebooks. Meanwhile, other students manage their free period effectively by waiting for their counselors while socializing with friends at the same time.

During one of his Calculus classes, Mr. Nec exhibits dedication in helping one of his students, Claire Yoo ('01), with a complicated Calculus problem. With his much-needed guidance, Yoo hopes to understand all the criteria being taught, as well as achieve a high score on the upcoming test.

Adeptly gluing together the fragments of his artwork, Nicholas Mitchell ('04) displays his personal flair of creativity in 3-D Art. In creating a piece of art, many students feel a sense of pride when viewing their fully completed work while they bask in the fruits of their labor. Other students, however, take art classes to develop their aesthetic skills.
THE LEARNING CURVE

Striding down the long hall, a stranger to the school would most likely notice the diverse activities which students engage in during the eight-period school day. Some classmates discuss a homework assignment in a classroom, a student busily crams for an upcoming test in the far corner, a teacher helps his student with a Physics problem, and an aspiring artist busily molds a sculpture. Obviously, academics play a fundamental role in school because without it, there would be no school. However, the possibilities in school academics are limitless. Some students may have the interest to study courses that are strictly related to science, while some students are more responsive to art courses. Many students even select a wide range of classes just so they have variety. But the main point is that whatever classes students do prefer, academics enable them to mature as an individual, as well as provide insight and experience on a particular course.

Concentrating on the challenging lab at hand, Sameer Mathur ('01), and Gagan Sawhney ('01) meticulously create marks on the gel electrophoresis lab in Biology. With one mere inaccuracy or miscalculation, the results of the complicated experiment could be severely altered. Therefore, the two students must conduct their lab efficiently. But at the same time they must work slowly in order to avoid mistakes.

Studiously lounging on a stone bench in the front of school, Nhi Truong ('04) seizes the moment to scribble down notes for homework. Truong approaches a more refreshing method of studying in deciding to study in the open environment of the outdoors. Instead of jotting notes in a stuffy classroom, the fresh air benefits in both her studies and her health.

East Challenges

Is every action truly counterbalanced by some equal and opposite reaction? Is the force of an object really dependent on the mass and acceleration of that object? What is the relevance of Newton’s laws? On January 24 of 2001, these freshmen from the QPS program held a balloon mobile contest where they actually tested some of the concepts from the classroom and applied them to real life situations. Newton’s laws, however, are just some of the concepts that freshmen have to explore in this one year course. Regardless of whether freshmen are involved in the Stem Program, CPS, or OPS, all are offered the unique resources of East to decide what interests them and what they wish to pursue next year and the year after. The balloon mobile contest remains only one example of the innumerable opportunities East offers freshmen in the new world of high school they find themselves in the middle of.
Randy Green ('04) takes a moment to reflect upon the grade he just received. Many freshmen must adjust to the new learning environment they encounter at East. Sometimes the pressure of high school may be overwhelming, but eventually freshmen learn to settle into their new daily routine.

They walk down the hall baffled and bewildered by the new atmosphere. The anxiety and tension builds up as they search for the correct classroom and teachers. They are freshmen, or known to most upper classmen as frosh. Unlike the previous year where they reigned as the top class of their school, they once again return to being the youngest members of this new and bigger edifice. In search of their place in this new building, many students try to adapt by acquiring new knowledge and distinct qualities that differentiate between their past school to their present. But eventually freshmen get used to their new home here at East and feel more comfortable. By joining many diverse extracurricular activities, not only can they get acquainted with their other classmates but they also have the opportunity to participate in some interesting and fun programs. At East, there is something for every student, whether it be sports, cultural clubs, science leagues, or theatre. With so much to offer, the transition between junior high to East might be a burden to some while being a challenge to many.

To many high school students, the most stressful and vigorous year could be identified to be the sophomore year. Whether the reason might be that sophomore year is the first challenging year in high school or is truly the most difficult high school year, the tension tends to build up as one works diligently to fulfill his or her task. However, there does exist a light beyond this dark tunnel as one finds some freedom and enjoyment in such activity as the sophomore cotillion. In this long awaited dance, sophomores get together with their partner and friends to forget about school and take some pleasure by dancing and socializing with their friends. By being able to forget about work and study for one day, students can relax and reduce the stress suffered throughout the year. As they return to school the following week, most will feel refreshed and rejuvenated with new energy and thought. Sophomore cotillion does not only symbolize to be a simple dance, but rather a break from study and activity that will assist the students for the rest of the year.
Most underclassmen would agree that one of the most eagerly anticipated events during high school occurs when they are eligible for their driver’s license. Students long await the birthday when they are allowed to take their driving test, get their picture taken, and receive that new ID that gives them access to the road. But first, they must learn about the rules.

At East, sophomores are required to take the driver’s education class instead of health for one semester. They are taught all about speed limits, driving violations, and anything else they need to know before getting behind the wheel. Then, at the end of the semester, sophomores are offered the official state written test.

As one of the driver’s education teachers this year, Coach Valore wanted to make the class a little more interesting. For this reason, he started a collection of road signs which are placed all around the room to create an interesting and relevant environment. There are stop signs, warning signs, and even stop light!
The Transition: A Balancing Act

A few hours of sleep a night. Tests and homework that never seem to end. Waking up in the morning, realizing that you've forgotten to do that last math problem you're supposed to hand in tomorrow. Sound familiar? The jump from ninth grade to tenth grade often provides a rude awakening for many students. Not only does the workload double, but many sophomores also become much more college-minded. Students join clubs and other extra curricular activities, hoping to build up their resumes to be the top in their class. Between the schoolwork and other endless activities, school often becomes a balancing act. Some say that sophomore year is tough because students have the chance to take more difficult courses than freshmen year, not to mention the higher expectations of teacher. "It's really important to take the most challenging courses and to be involved in a lot of activities. But sometimes, it gets to be too much," said Samitha Bhargava ('03). There is an upside to all of this, though. Because so many students choose courses suited to their personal interests, they can meet new people who are interested in the same things. "One of the better attributes of sophomore year is the opportunity for us to choose from a wider course selection, allowing us to be in classes with others who have similar interests," remarked Anna Cho ('03). Undoubtedly, the transition to sophomore year can often be a difficult one, however it also opens the door to endless opportunity as students may only begin to take advantage of all that East truly has to offer.

To complete his artwork, RonOverton ('03) procures a nice glob of rubber cement. Sophomores can explore the variety of electives that East offers and expand their horizons. As students choose different classes, they may discover hidden talents that they can work to improve.

Eager to participate in English class, Ryan Neery ('03), Lauren Klue ('03), and Lauren Goldlust ('03) raise their hands. Like these three scholars, students can share their profound thoughts and personal feelings about a novel or poem. Round table discussions, popularized by Ms. Rocchino, who got the idea from The Once and Future King, are useful in getting everyone involved in discussing themes, symbols, and other concepts.

As their teacher lectures about the evolution of organisms, students study the skeletal structure of a frog. With this knowledge, the students can gain a better understanding of the human body. Dissecting the frog in Biology 1 is an experience students look forward to or dread, but one that will never be forgotten.
O, THE CHOICES YOU HAVE!

After the long and vigorous years of high school, almost all students look forward to the summer ahead of them. Some spend the time sleeping and playing video games, while others try to take advantage of various summer programs offered. There exist innumerable opportunities for students with almost any interest. For example, each year Cherry Hill East chooses a select few to represent the school at programs such as Boy’s State, Girls’ State, Rotary, Governor’s School, and many others. In addition, many students make use of their summer vacations by matriculating in classes offered in a variety of institutions. During the summer prior to their junior year, Peggy Yang (‘02), Mei-Ling Gao (‘02), Stephanie Chang (‘02), and Jennifer Wang (‘02), and a few others decided to take US History I at the Rittenhouse Academy in Philadelphia. This gave them a resourceful, yet fun way to spend their summer vacations, also putting them ahead of their peers and freeing their junior year schedules for other classes. Peggy Yang said, “Class was a joke at Rittenhouse, but it was nice spending time with my friends and shopping in center city.”
New Found Freedom

A license. The power to drive. The power to live. The power to be free. Juniors one by one pass their driving tests which has become merely a part of the initiation into adulthood, yet another step closer to independence. They no longer have to rely on parents or friends to chauffeur them. Instead, they are in control of their own lives. However, teenagers must accept responsibility for themselves, their car, their passengers and the consequences of reckless driving. As terrifying as it may seem, new drivers are faced with many difficult decisions on the road. Nonetheless, students fully enjoy their new found freedom as they speed their way to school. With this small beginning of independence from their parents, juniors are now starting to mold their own futures.
IS ETS A MONOPOLY?

Practice makes perfect. It is often multiple guess for some students when it comes to standardized tests. Mrs. Gardner helps three of her students, Linda Chuong ('02), Alison Timko ('02) and Sonal Mistry ('02) better understand the fundamental concepts necessary to score high on the SATs.

In the jungle of high school, it is all about survival of the fittest. To get into college, students must prepare in order to do well on SATs which accounts for a great part of the admissions process. Heather Butler ('02) and Andrew Elkan ('02) flip through one of the many practice SAT books to get familiar with the test.

In addition to the endless homework assignments, quizzes, tests, and projects from regular classes, high school students must also deal with those annoying standardized tests like PSATs, SATs, SAT IIs, and AP Exams. Which tests should one take? When? Where? How should one study?

Not only must students go through the hassles of studying for each test, but many also complain that the results often signify little. Some people are just poor test takers, and these exams cannot fully measure their genius. Knowledge cannot be limited to whether A or C is the correct answer choice. So, how can one test hold as much importance as a full four years of class work does?

Many people agree that the College Board has simply gotten out of hand. Over the course of a few years in high school, a student can spend up to hundreds of dollars just to take these exams. Peggy Yang ('02), a junior currently cramming and signing up for these SATs says, "ETS is just a money-making machine. They specifically schedule application deadlines so they can make money. It sets a wonderful example for prospective business students." What a coincidence it is that students must register for the next month's tests before receiving previous scores. Otherwise, they must pay an early fee to get their scores over the phone. Either way, ETS makes its profit.

Looking back on it all, senior Jim Lim ('01) comments, "I find that charging such an exorbitant rate for tests I am required to take to gain acceptance into academic institutions is a travesty."

For these reasons and countless others, most people agree that ETS has become a monopoly, and that things must change!

Forever Young

Trading stickers and games of silentball no longer evoke the same enthusiasm as they once did. Nor, does the perfect weekend consist of watching T.G.I.F. and going to skating parties. We do not wear No Fear shirts, and our Nike air pumps have been retired to a box in the attic. Afternoons once spent at little league and gymnastics classes are now crammed with homework, unread novels, and boundless obligations, as the days of childhood nonchalance appear distant memories. From a sixth grader at Mt. Misery, to a Beck bobcat, and finally as an eager freshman, we have indeed grown and matured to become the people we are today.

Aside from the obvious academic strides we have made since freshmen, the past four years have also provided us with the opportunity to make a significant personal progression as well. Beyond lessons of algebra and Spanish, we have been taught many important lessons of life. We learned that we must deal with the unexpected; we learned the real value of a good friend; but most importantly, we learned how to be us. We were surely challenged along the way, as our character was often tested, but as each small feat was conquered, our confidence grew, while our selfhood continued to flourish. Sometimes, we won, and other times we lost. But all of the times helped shape our ever-changing perspective of ourselves.

Now, as seniors, with a heightened understanding of all that surrounds us, we not only reckon on our time spent at East, but we reflect upon our entire spectrum of experiences throughout our young lives. Instead of playing basketball, we now play tennis and share experiences. We may not pick kickball teams, but we do pick the people we want to spend time with and include in our lives. We pick our future. However, just because everything is different, doesn’t mean that everything has changed. May we always face life’s obstacles with the same ardor that we had as youngsters, always choosing to skip and frolic through life, rather than being content to just walk. May the burning feeling of eternal youth within us all never be extinguished. For, the person who will walk to the podium and receive his diploma will have so much more to celebrate than the completion of high school. The person dressed in cap and gown is also a fresh-faced 10 year old with two missing teeth. He is the school spelling bee champ; he is the president of student council; he is a scholar; he is a son; he is a friend, and now he is also graduate. Yes, we celebrate the conclusion of our high school years, but moreover, we rejoice in all that we once were, and because of these experiences, in all that we know that we can now achieve.

Class of 2001 Twins: Ed and Matt Brown, Chris and Andrew Hartung, Ryan and Brittany Harris, Neely and Tali Elisha, Gail and Jill Sweeney.

TWINS

Nope, your eyes aren't playing tricks on you, and you're definitely not going crazy. Don't worry, you're not loosing your mind, but you are seeing double. As you get acquainted with our class of about four hundred and twenty students, the uniqueness of our first class of the millennium becomes apparent. With graduates coming in all different shapes, colors, and sizes we echo the diversity that makes Cherry Hill East special.

However, though we are such a special blend of differences, there are ten faces that are strikingly similar. Maybe there is something in the water, because there are five sets of twins in the graduating class of 2001. Twins Ed and Matt Brown, Neely and Tali Elisha, Brittney and Ryan Harris, Andrew and Chris Hartung, and Gail and Jill Sweeney can make any head turn twice. Amid the phenomenal athletes, artists and scholars, these twins bring another element of uniqueness to our senior class. Whether in the public eye or athletic competition, these twins, like many of their classmates, bring something special to all of their involvements.

Given the competitive nature of our school, all students strive for individuality. Perhaps twins have more trouble, faced with the stereotype of twins being one in the same. "In sports, academics, and friendships my desire to be the best I can be sometimes leads to competition between my sister and me—but I would not be wrong to think other twins feel the same way I do." (Gail Sweeney, '01) Disproving this generalization, they have all separately made unique contributions to the East community. Conversely, they are lucky enough to have unconditional support from each other. East has successfully nurtured these relationships as it has for other students' friendships developing over the past four years.

Like their classmates, these twins have spent their years at East facing obstacles and overcoming challenges. Furthermore, while disproving the twin myth, they have proven a great example of five, or ten, of the outstanding pieces that fit together making the class of 2001 as special as we are.

SYBIL NINAN
2 West High Ridge Rd.
As we step towards the horizon and leave behind many familiar things, we take with us the information we learned from books and people. Forever second removed, we read about wars in books, watch scandals unfold on TV and learn about triumphs from elders. Luckily, we have yet to experience calamities first hand. And perhaps the first world event that we remember was the fall of the Berlin Wall; we may not have understood it then, but we comprehend the implications of it now.

Because we are the first class to graduate in the millennium from East, we have experienced the economic boom in the United states, technological breakthroughs in Silicon Valley and political conflicts in the Electoral College. But it's not only the serious events that effect us. Movie stars, scandals, crimes, and school change us for the better and worse. Fortunately, we were allowed to flourish in an economically secure environment. We were ready and able to build (or find) success.

As each pebble thrown in the pond has a ripple, each action and decision that we make affects the people around us, perhaps the world. As we leave East, we must consider what we have left behind. Not just good memories or statistical records of our amazing artists, athletes and scholars, but how our class will have influenced the ones that come after us. Conceivably, we may have set a bad example... or we could have been one of the best. However, we brought style, intellect and ability to this school and part of us will remain, as a trophy, as a news article, as a memory.

Confident that we graduate from this school with flair, we will be able to look back at our time here as four years spent with many anguishes and successes. Like pictures in an album named East, hopefully everyone will have a good memory of East and its graduates tucked away for a rainy day in the future.

SPECIAL FEATURES

SENIORITIS

No more pencils, no more books, no more teacher’s dirty looks ... An anthem reserved by most for the end of the school year, seniors inevitably begin chanting this song as early as the beginning of the second semester. This year as seniors we are no exception. Like the classes before us, we have put in our time, passed our midterms and studied for our tests and now we deserve our break so commonly known as senioritis.

At the onset of this disease, dreaded by teachers, awaited by seniors, schoolwork and extracurricular activities fall by the wayside, leaving room for the more relaxing, finer things of teenage life. Thought of by most adults as the most awful ailment to cripple any student, our special class asks the question, is it that bad? Sure some seniors will stop reading assigned books and others will leave worksheets and assignments to pile up in the lockers, but some responsibilities are not so easily forgotten. Senior editors of 'Eastside' work harder than ever in the spring, constructing their last papers for the school. Senior class government plans for the prom and other last events that will seal the class’ memories for years to come. Senior athletes and managers practice and play just as hard to reinvent the reputation of Cougar excellence.

So as some administrators begin to fret as the first symptoms of senioritis pop up in the class, they should remember what the Class of 2001 has been known for over the past three years, especially during the crunch time of the college rush season. After working to discover the balance between dedication and relaxation, our class has found a way to manage our responsibilities and our good times.

Senior Prom

Remembered with smiles and tears, our senior prom symbolizes our final bow as we prepare for departure from our long stay in Cougar Country. We have spent the past years anticipating every facet that would make this evening perfect. Ladies have searched for that perfect dress, the one in a million that makes us look our best, while gentlemen spent their savings on that tux that makes the statement. But it’s not just the tuxedo or the dress that matters most; it’s also about the accessories, limos and after prom plans that will all come together in the end to ensure the ideal night. Last but not least, we chose that special someone who will help us make the night even more memorable. Each selection reflects who we have become and what we have come to expect from this night. Although much stress comes from planning this night, we know it will be worth all of our time and efforts.

As we gather together before the prom, we realize we’ve spent more than a few weekends at the mall and an afternoon in front of the mirror to get here—we’ve spent years. Between the laughter and tears, we’ve found the friendships that will last past this milestone, past graduation and hopefully through all life has to offer. However unlike graduation, where we celebrate our personal successes, the senior prom gives us time to enjoy each other’s company and to appreciate each other at our finest. This is the one night when we can forget about college and the future and just live in the present while reminiscing about the past. We realize now more than ever that this is the pinnacle of our lives here at East.

We leave the dance with a sense of closure and one of the powers of friendship. As we walk out of the dance, we take the first steps toward the horizon. It’s amazing how much strength one celebration of friendship and memories can give us in these steps toward the future.

Vivek Kumar button his shirt as he tries on another suit. Preparing for the prom has already consumed at least a week of his time but he says, “I do it because it’s worth spending the time and the money. Besides, it’s not every day that you would volunteer to get dressed up in a tux.”

Your four year journey at East has been no less exciting. This class has continued the tradition of excellence and has set standards which future classes will be measured by.

As you prepare to leave East and the familiar surroundings of Cherry Hill, the world awaits you. Your dreams, talents, and education will undoubtedly take you far. I have every confidence that our future is being passed into your capable hands.

God speed and good luck in all of your endeavors.

Sincerely,

James J. Gallagher
Principal

Dear Class of 2001:

It has been an honor to serve as your Grade Level Principal during your last year at Cherry Hill East. I fondly remember my initial assembly with you in September. You welcomed me graciously and made me feel at home. I would like to thank each of you for that experience. I also fondly reflect upon our meetings during English classes. Your behavior was respectful and your questions were not only well articulated, but also challenged me. Our interactions in the hallways, in classrooms, in the grade level office, in the cafeteria and at school activities have enabled me to watch you grow and mature. I know that each of you is prepared for life after high school.

As I look to the future, I wish each of you the best. Face your challenges with determination and accept your successes with humility. I truly believe the individual can make his or her dreams a reality by hard work and perseverance. Reflect upon your years at Cherry Hill East and build upon the solid foundation you have been given.

I would like to congratulate you upon your commencement and wish you a future of happiness and success.

Sincerely,

Mrs. McLeester

Dear Class of 2001:

It seems like only yesterday that you arrived at East as bewildered Freshman and now you are Seniors almost ready to graduate.

Even though I didn’t start or finish with you, I cherish the two full years I had with you as your principal. Our social activities were great and I saw you mature as a group.

It was a difficult decision to leave you and I miss our meetings and conversations.

It was a pleasure to know you and be your principal. I am sorry that I was not able to get to know more of you.

Good Luck in your future endeavors.

Mr. Lacovara

Class Officers: President Iris Goldstein, Vice Presidents Colleen Court,
First class to graduate in the new millennium, is what we were told. No one could have guessed the vast potential that would unfold.

S is for the SPIRIT that lives in the class of ’01
E is for the EXPERIENCES that have made our four years fun
N is for the NIGHTS we spent studying without much sleep
I is for the INDIVIDUALS that make our class unique
O is for the OPPORTUNITIES East has given us
R is for the RESPONSIBILITIES we took on without much fuss
S is for the SUCCESS that we achieved SENIORS, after four years of memories, it has now come time to leave

A long time ago, with great anticipation and extreme fear
We entered the halls of East, where we would spend our next four years.

From sports to clubs, we knew to get involved from the start
This was the “buffet” message that many took to heart.

As soon as we winked, the year had passed by
Our time as naive Frosh sure did fly.

Returning as Sophomores, we knew what the year would bring
Though still underclassmen, we could find our way from wing to wing.

When Soph year was through, it suddenly dawned
Two more years, and then we’re gone.

Upperclassmen at last, we were proud to be
Yet Junior year stress brought down our glee.

Classes were tough, but we still survived
From SAT testing to getting that license to drive.

With Junior year complete, we were in the home stretch,
Senior year hopefully would surpass all the rest.

Disney, Prom, cut days, and Spirit Week
Making a memorable senior year is all we did seek.

Thank you to all the faculty and staff,
Who have led us along a wonderful path.

Your dedication and care has let us persevere
Educating us, year after year after year after year.

To our fellow students, always keep in mind
The friendships and memories that have formed over time.

Now, our time at East has come to a close
And we hope that everyone truly knows:

The past four years have been both amazing and fun
Good luck to everyone in the years to come!
If you are actually reading this, you probably fit into three distinct mold's of people. You either know me and already have an opinion of me, and are just curious to see what kind of stuff I wrote down so that you can justify your opinion whatever it may be. Or, a few of you may even be reading this because you thought I looked awfully good on the picture that appears directly above this. In such a case, you should probably be reading Rob's. He's on the next page. Anyway, most of you are probably desperately looking for success, because you can't find it in your life. I'm going to direct this essay towards this third type, since I have even less to say to the other two. Unfortunately, if you have come to find the secret to success, you are probably going to be disappointed. Try any of the other 6 before you try me. I warn you that if you continue reading, you could very well be taking advice from a man who could qualify to write an essay about how I managed to be so unsuccessful in my life. Life is that random. It is full of ups and downs. Some get lucky, and some do not. You never know what to expect. What I can offer from my experience is some advice that can't hurt, and seemed to work for me. Keep trying no matter how much things suck. Never give up. Set your own priorities and follow them. Set reachable goals and work hard to achieve them. Do not waste time. Do pay attention to details; they make all the difference. At the same time, balance goal-orientation with experiences. Take time to ponder, interpret, socialize, explore, talk, laugh. travel, learn, pursue interests, or sometimes just sleep. Take opportunities when they are presented. You have nothing to lose. The key, I think, to a successful life is the struggle to balance the two approaches perfectly. Few get it right. But, the rest die trying. And, that is what you should strive for.

So how did I manage to rise to become the crème de la crème? First off, I would like to take this opportunity to thank hook on fonix cuz it really worked for me. I would not command my current mastery of phonetics had it not been for that splendidiferous program. However, I would be remiss in my duties if I failed to thank my second grade teacher who said that I would never amount to anything. Her words of wisdom were truly a source of inspiration to me throughout my high school career. Likewise, the paragon set forth by Bill Clinton also deeply affected me. Thus, I strove to follow in his illustrious footsteps in every way I possibly could. Obviously, one cannot compare the contributions of any of the aforementioned people to the lessons which my parents indoctrinated within me. It was they who taught me to get by in school by pretending to know everything even though I was totally clueless most of the time. On a more serious note, that is REALLY how I did manage to get through high school.

Naturally, I can't reveal my secrets to success. After all, I told everyone. They would hardly be secrets, now would they? But now, nearing the end of high school, I suppose it's too late for a few tips to let anyone steal my rank...

1. Read constantly. It doesn't really matter what. Classics, mystery, history, dictionaries, the back of shampoo bottles - not only does it help boost those SAT verbal scores, this habit can help you acquire that impressively pretentious vocabulary that marks you as a rising star. (Of course, your choice of genre will help determine your popularity at parties - "where's a small three-masted vessel" or "lather, rinse, repeat" won't get you too far with that cute salesclerk you met at the mall.)

2. Give up on having a social life. While you're at it, you might as well forget about TV or sleep, too. After all, what's more important - having a great time in high school, or getting into Ivy League school so you can act snotty at your 10-year reunion?

3. Listen only to classical music. Studies have suggested that listening to Mozart can help increase math skills. Of course, they haven't proven anything yet, but it's better to be safe than sorry. Although nobody does this, including me, don't let that stop you. Just think how superior you can feel when you don't recognize a single song at the prom.

4. Find a really good chiropractor. This won't improve grades or SATs or anything academic for that matter, but when you drag home a third of your body weight in books every day, this can make a world of difference.

5. Be a perfectionist. Imagine the pride you'll feel as everyone fumbles through falling apart folders or messy notes books while you sit with your chronologically ordered, color coded, perfectly typed notes. Granted, this tends to take large quantities of time and results in even your few friends becoming disgusted as you take anal retentiveness to new heights, but we've already shown that the satisfaction is well worth the trouble.

Now, these tips, applied diligently with a mixture of hard work, arrogance, and judicious blackmail (whoops, wasn't supposed to mention that last one), can ensure that you too can succeed. Well, it's a little late for high school, but you don't really need a social life in college, either...
Secrets To Success

With four of "the best years of my life" spent at Cherry Hill East, some might wonder the secret ingredients to the recipe of my success. Now, these ingredients have never been disclosed to anyone before. Please take precaution when trying them on yourself.

First and foremost, my success began long before I entered the halls of East. In fact, some might say it began before I was born, even before conception. Some choose to call it plain old dumb luck. You see, a mere twenty-three and a half hours before my conception, my father ran into a little accident. Actually, the accident ran into him. Out of nowhere, a freak bolt of lighting struck him. It is not very often that this happens and even more rare that someone survives this type of accident, but he did (and surprisingly without any harm). Now, it has not been scientifically confirmed, but ever since that point, the intelligence level in my family has grown exponentially to massive proportions. Some might even say that we are as bright as lightning. (Pun intended, or course).

Another ingredient to my success may be attributed to my specialty formulated apple juice. (Actually, it's just Minute Maid Premium Apple Juice.) It seems that after drinking a glass a day for the last eighteen years, the neural connections in my brain have tripled. This may be a result of some chemical reaction with the leftover radiation from the lightning bolt, but as long as it keeps working, I won't ask questions. I guess an apple a day does help keep the doctor away. (Kind of...ok not really, but it sounded like a cool thing to say)

Add to the above ingredients some 230,552 hours of studying and homework, good work habits, and power beads: you now know the secrets to my success. Serves one high school student right!

If there is one motto I live by, it is definitely this: "Enjoy yourself. These are the good old days you are going to miss in the years ahead". This person truly knew what he was talking about. I am lucky to have learned this so early in life, as those less fortunate than myself will only realize it after it is too late. Working hard, giving school, sports, family, and friends my dedication, has been important to me. However, making time for myself has been equally important because you are only given one chance to be a teenager. I refuse to regret not taking advantage of this time. The key to success is balancing priorities.

Aside from a few minor changes from my childhood (I lost the fat cheeks, my proudest achievement), I'd like to believe that I am still the same ambitious, outgoing, and personable guy I started out as. My parents gave me the keys I needed to unlock doors along the path, such as opportunities to learn by experiencing what the world had to offer. My brother gave me the chance to grow next to someone so close to me, yet so different. He has taught me how to live with others who may not be the same as myself. Most importantly, my friends allowed me to have fun, taught me how to love, and other things that no book could ever match.

I have been dedicated. I have studied and struggled and stayed up late on nights when my bed looked very inviting. I put work obligations ahead of things that I have wanted to do more. However, these obligations do not come without rewards. After pushing myself to the limit and completing the goals I set for myself, I was able to step back and enjoy. I was born wearing a Duke University Blue Devils diapair, and now, eighteen years later. I wear their sweatshirt proudly and look forward to the future.

So what are my secrets to success? How did I rise to the elevated lofty status of a ranking scholar ... Two words: Tom and Jerry. (Oh, maybe that was three.) Ever since I could sit up by myself in front of the television, I started watching Tom and Jerry. As you evidently can see, Tom and Jerry are truly the kind of inspiration and educational television programming that all children should be exposed to. (While Willie E. Coyote and the Roadrunner are almost as good as Tom and Jerry, they have to come in a close second since they just cannot match the sheer intelligence of the famous cat and mouse duo.) In any case, just observing the brilliance of Tom and Jerry has made me the studious scholar that I am. This cartoon has taught me much of the profound knowledge of advanced calculus and physics that I know. All of these meticulous, intricate plots that Tom devised applies the rules of differentiation and projectile motion to calculate the instantaneous velocity needed for Jerry to fail exactly face first into the center of his sandwich. These antics truly let my interest into the challenging concepts of Calculus and Physics, and maybe even English. Although most of his plans fall, mistakes only offered him an opportunity to start afresh. Thus, not only did Tom and Jerry teach me scholarly subjects such as physics, but it also taught me valuable life lessons. Obviously, I take after Jerry, the smart, handsome one.

But of coarse, I have had a lot of other inspiration and advice along the way over these past 12 years that put me where I stand today. I am successful because of the loving support of my parents, friends, teachers, and coaches. The best advice I ever received was "Try your best, that's all anyone can ask for." I take this attitude through everything: school, baseball, and living life.

But seriously, want the real reason I am so successful? Easy, SLEEP! Through my years of high school, I never once pulled the famous all-nighters that my friends frequently do. Eight, just eight, hours of sleep each night is the key. I laugh at those late-night procrastinators. HAHAHA. Take it from me, a ranking scholar.

- Earn some extra money
- Make trips to the shore
- Find cliff notes for the summer reading book
- Catch up on TV reruns missed during the year
- Sleep till three
- Vacation with the family
- Play all day at amusement parks
- FORGET ABOUT SCHOOL!!

Rittenhouse Summer 2000

Class in Rittenhouse was easy, so I had lots of time to make new friends and experience life in the big city.
-Sameer Mathur

I wanted to take more classes at East and going to Rittenhouse gave me that opportunity.
-Jim Lim

Rittenhouse is really what you make of it. You can learn a lot about history or you can waste $200 and your summer vacation.

Welcome to Cougar Country... where our national anthem goes to the beat of friendship and our staple product is memories galore. Cherry Hill East was our home for four years, providing the backdrop to our often uncertain, but always exciting teenage experience. If these halls could talk; if the jammed lockers, the gossiping students congregating at the wing intersections and the teachers’ disapproving glares could tell their tale. Yes, if these halls, built upon the foundations of camaraderie and lined with both jest and detest, could tell their story, it would go somewhat like this...

With our days as Bobcats kicked to the curb, we traded in our innocent middle school mindset and joined the big leagues as super cool high school students. Timidly we strolled the halls (always in groups of course) and relished in the all the splendors of our abode. We were introduced to a world where each day had a number; a world where World Civilization, QPS and books that weighed more than we did occupied our homework schedules. To boot, we were also treated to a delectable spread, compliments of East’s famous “buffet” of opportunity, as our afternoons were filled with acronyms: SADD, SGA, TOPS, and FOP, among the many other clubs and activities offered. We handed in our forms and tried out for the team; we handed in our papers and tried to improve that bad interim grade and make honor roll; and most importantly, we explored new options socially and tried out new friendships.

The Freshman Dance became the climax of our budding social lives. The girls kept their eyes on the older, more mature men, while the boys surveyed the scene for a senior girl to drool over. Spirit Week also fascinated us all, where we took second place in the dance competition as Muppet Babies, initiating a tradition of class pride and winning. We established the crowds that we would mostly associate with during our years to come. Some got involved with theatre; some achieved the status of scholars, while others were just content to be the party animals. Even as we were trying to find ourselves and our niche here at East, we took time out to mourn the deaths of Princess Diana and Mother Theresa and engross ourselves in President Clinton’s alleged sex scandals. Surely, freshman year brought excitement and thrills, but by the year’s end, we were ready to “move it on up” and separate ourselves from our ranking as “frosh.” We had conquered the halls of B-Wing and were ready for more...

Sophomore

With our newfound freshman friendships still going strong, we branched out and made some new friends as well: Cliffs, Barrons, and caffeine. We no longer had the time to gossip on the phone as we did freshman year, as the academic challenges of sophomore year posed a threat to our social lives. Midterms came to haunt us, while honors and AP classes reared their ugly heads into our schedules and our sleep time; the enraged battle for class rank was on!! No longer getting the attention of newcomers and not upperclassmen yet, we just kinda enjoyed a rather uneventful year marred by the memories of drosophila labs and the stink of the fetal pig. Our main source of excitement was drivers ed, as we dreamed of the day when we would no longer have to depend on mom for a ride and we could say goodbye to the big yellow limos.

Academic strides aside, we also learned that there were more uses for a cigar than just smoking, as Monica Lewinsky and sex in the White House continued to invade our lives. School violence and Columbine also had a chilling presence in our cozy community, as East’s parking lots turned into tailgate parties (minus the beer and cheerfulness), for the threat of bomb scares interrupted our days. But through it all: the hard work, the sleepless nights, and the fearful interruptions, we kept on smiling and the hallways kept on buzzing as our epic continues...

Junior

And ahh ... the sweet smell of upperclassmen — As big juniors, we enjoyed our status at the upper end of the totem pole. With 11th grade upon us, there was no stopping, perfectly poised behind the wheel, Cherry Hill was suddenly a whole new ball game. We sure had fun enjoying the freedom of the open road and driving all around, but the perpetual academic strains still drove us crazy! SATs and the cruel politics of class ranking invaded our lives, as every adult we were even remotely acquainted with had the same question — "Have you started looking at colleges yet?" But even if we didn't exactly have our futures charted out, we were certainly relishing every adventure of the present. We thrived on the prom buzz, kicked up our heels and yee-hawed as cowboys during Spirit Week, and sailed into fun and excitement with the spring musical, Anything Goes. Without doubt, somewhere amidst periodic tables and Simon papers, we always managed to have a good time.

Good times meant good friends; as older and more mature upperclassmen, we developed important social skills and began to recognize what we truly wanted in our friends. A lot of the pettiness which had been such a part of our lives during our first two years of high school was replaced by maturing minds with a heightened awareness of our world ... Hey, I mean please, we were even donating blood now. As we continued our journey through high school, a little boy named Elian Gonzalez also made a journey that captured our attention; we survived a Y2K scare and sat glued to our television sets with Who Wants to Be a Millionaire. Junior year was surely a good year, and the hallways were humming with excitement and anticipation ...

Senior Year

Cougars we are — we roar and strut with confidence; this is our year. As soon as the bombardment of college applications, interviews, and essays ceased, we were able to kick back and enjoy what our grade does best — smother ourselves in a sense of superiority and enjoy the grand culmination of our last four years. Senior year gave us the opportunity to bask in all that we had accomplished during high school, while also giving us the chance to consider the potential we have to accomplish great things. With an eye on the future, but the other still glued to MTV, senior year also gave us the privilege to live one last year as carefree teenagers, where paying the rent and finding a job were still of minimal concern.

With an unconquerable spirit, we found ourselves enjoying the company of our peers but also enjoying the solitude of being one with ourselves. Compared to our days as puerile freshman, we are now able to reflect upon our high school years and recognize every important step of our development. As seniors, on the brink of the rest of our lives, we have a mightier conception, now more than ever, of who are and who we want to be. With high anticipation and unscathed ambition, we embrace this year as a stepping-stone for the rest of our lives.

And even as we realize so much about ourselves this year, we are also able to open up our minds, sample, and embrace everybody and everything else that is out there. As we try to construct our futures, our school is similarly in construction, as bricks and builders are common sights from our classroom windows. While we frenzied with college applications, our entire nation was also in a state of turmoil, as we bore witness to the closest election in our country's history. As the rest of the country tuned into Survivor, we celebrated our own survival of high school by carousing in Disney World, Project Graduation and various other "seniors only" festivities.

And then before we knew it, we were throwing our caps high in the air; we shriek in jubilation; some cry; some laugh ... amidst the revelry, no one seemed to notice that the halls are now empty ... the chatter at the intersection has suddenly stopped, and someone just slammed the last locker. The bell has run for the last time, and that C-wing gate is closing. But somewhere in the distance another gate is opening, and yes, if these halls could talk, what a story they would tell. The final chapter is now complete though. We think we know; we strive to know; but still delight in what we don't know and have yet to discover. And at this point in our young lives, we begin a new volume.

Dear Christina,

We are so proud of you. You did a great job in high school and we hope that you will continue your education with the same effort and determination. Wishing you a bright and successful future. You are a wonderful daughter! Good luck and way to go!!

Love always and forever,
Mom, Dad, and Eric

To Catherine

Pride can not explain it,
Our hearts can not contain it.

We encouraged you and helped you along
We taught you what is right and wrong.

We tried to ease your sorrow,
And we shared each bright tomorrow.

With school and friends,
The fun never ends.

With classes and games,
Now things won't be the same.

We gave you wings, helped strengthen your heart,
And now that you've graduated, you're ready to start.

Start out in the world on a course of your own,
But always knowing you're never alone.

Congratulations, Cat!
We wish you love, peace, health and happiness

All our love,
Mom, Dad, John and Paddy
Dear Kimberly,

Where have the years gone?
Just yesterday you were a three-year-old dancer in a yellow, polka dot bikini. Today, you are a high school senior about to begin a new chapter in your life.

Your future is so bright.
We are very proud of you, and we love you more than words can say.

Love forever,

Mom and Dad

Dear Kimmy,
You are the best big sister in the whole world.
You play with us, you help us with our homework, and you even let us ride in your car. We will miss you so much when you leave for college.
What we won't miss is the way you scream,
".....get out of my room!"

With love from your little brothers,
Joshua, Louis and Jonah

Real friends are those who, when you've made a fool of yourself, don't feel that you've done a permanent job.
JAY
When you leave, I'll miss having you around. I'll miss the way you could make me laugh when I was having a horrible day, our convos about contradicting subjects, and especially, rides to school. (J/k) I'll miss your company on family vacations and your helpful comments about almost everything I do. You are my brother by birth, but friend by choice. Embrace the memories!
Good Luck in College!!

To our Star,
Throughout your life
you have made us
proud, one stage at a time.
Continue to be who
you are, because you are special.

Love, hugs, and kisses,
Mom, Dad, and Adam
Yesterday, you were our little Bear, making us laugh, keeping us busy,
making us proud.
watching you grow into the fine young man you are today.

Today, you are Guppy,
a standout athlete, a great student,
a sincere, level-headed young adult,
a child to make any parent proud.

Tomorrow, the sky is your limit!
Using all the talents you have been given Knowing that Mom, Dad, Katie, and Danny will be there for you always.
May you reach for your dreams.
Using your intelligence, determination,
internal drive and personality, you will soar.

And we will be there with the pride we have had since the day you were born. We love you, Brendan.

* * *

Brendan:
Congratulations! I can’t believe my “little” brother is now a college-bound man. I remember the days when we were younger, and I would watch out for you. Whenever there was some kind of problem, you would always come to me and somehow I would make it all better.
Please know that I am still here for you to come to with anything, and I will do everything in my power to try to ‘make it all better.’ I remember the days of walking hand in hand on the railroad tracks, being at your side. I will forever be at your side—helping and guiding you throughout life. I am so grateful to have someone who is my best friend and my brother. I thought the younger sibling was supposed to look up to the older one, but you prove me wrong. I smile inside each time I think of you because I am so incredibly proud of all your amazing accomplishments. Good luck next year. We will be on totally different tracks, but, Brendan, always remember that you can look ahead of you and you can look behind you, but I won’t be there. because I will be right next to you, hand in hand walking down the tracks of life together. I love you so much. Thanks for being the best brother and best friend anyone could ask for.

With my love always, Katie

Dear Lauren,

You are a sensitive, sweet, and caring person, and you have enriched our lives. Your enthusiasm for life is infectious! We are so proud of you, and we know that with your sense of commitment and your self-discipline, you can do anything! Good luck in college and in the future!

We Love You!!

Lauren-

I can't believe you're eighteen and going off to college. It seems like just yesterday we were in Washington D.C. getting stuck in the elevators with Danielle. Our memories go on forever and so does my love for you. You're the best sister a girl could ever hope for and I know if I ever have a problem, I can come to you. We've been through thick and thin together. As you grow up remember how much I love you, and how we will always have our childhood to look back and laugh at. No matter how old we get, I'm always your little sister. I love you!

Love to the moon back and beyond,
Lindsay

Rob-
Thank you for being such an awesome brother and friend. We have been through so much together and I will never forget all of the fun times and memories we've had. From our ski trips to the Bob and Phil concert, or just watching tv together, we always have fun and you constantly make me laugh. You are always there for me, whether to help me with my homework, listen to me, or to make me laugh when I'm upset. You are the best brother I could ever want. I'm going to miss you so much next year. I don't know what I'll do without you around the house!!
Good luck in college, I love you!!

Yesterday mom and I watched as you entered 1st grade. Today you graduate from high school, it isn’t fair time goes by too fast. I don’t have the words to express just how much joy and happiness you have brought into our lives, we love you daddy.

Mom, Dad, Michelle, Ray & “Bailey”
To my dearest Sara,
My whole life, all I ever wanted was a person to be able to hold and love and cherish more than anything else in the entire world. You are that person. Without you I am nothing. You keep me sane when the world puts me under more stress then I can deal with. I would crawl to the ends of the Earth for you if it would make you smile. I don't know how to express the way you truly make me feel. I am truly luckier than anyone I know simply because you are a part of my life. I love you more than anyone else on the face of this Earth. I can only hope that other people can be as truly happy as you make me. For everything you ever have and will do for me I thank you. You are truly an angel. How lucky I am to have you.

Love always,
Jon

Dear Jon,
I knew you were something special the day I met you. When you first opened your arms to me, you opened my eyes as well. You gave me the love and happiness I needed to see everything for all its value and more. Ever since that day, we've crossed streets, states, and oceans together and I wouldn't have wanted it any other way. I could stay with you forever and stare into your eyes, feel your heart beat, and listen to the sound of your voice. You've made most of my days worth waking up to. You're the best and I'll always hold a special place in my heart just for you because you are very special to me. You're the angel that makes my world more beautiful and I'll always love you.

Love always and forever,
Sara

Do I love you because you’re beautiful, or are you beautiful because I love you? Am I making believe I see in you a girl to perfect to be really true? Am I making believe I see in you a guy to perfect to be really true? Do I want you because you’re wonderful? Or are you wonderful because I want you? Are you the sweet invention of a lover’s dream or are you really as beautiful as you seem?

Therefore, I urge you, brothers, in view of God's mercy, to offer your bodies as living sacrifices holy and pleasing to God-this is your spiritual act of worship. Do not conform any longer to the pattern of this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind. True friends walk in when the rest of the world walks out.
To Ben Ruder

It seems like it took less time
For you to grow from the toddler in the picture
To the fine young man you have become
Than it took to write these words.

It seems like it took less time
For you to go from infant lulled to sleep by endless movies late on HBO
To serving movie patrons at the Ritz
Than it took To put your picture here.

It seems like it took less time
To complete all the college applications and all the financial aid forms
And figure out who would get your room
Than it did to accept that your days under our roof are numbered,
Though your place in our hearts is reserved forever.

BEST OF LUCK IN COLLEGE!

Until The End

We grew up together, starting in Horace Mann,
We've been close to departing, holding on by a few strands.

We've learned from each other as the years went by,
Between making mistakes and the tears we've all cried.

Through all the rough times we've had and the conversations we've shared,
We always listened to one another to show that we cared.

Wherever we go from here and the paths we decide to take,
I'll stand by all of you and the choices you make.

To my girl Strawberry, we always think the same,
Slim Shady, you're my dog but what goes on in your brain?
Nonnahn, we sat there for hours and put eggs in our hair.
Rae, I love you, thanks for always being there.

I wouldn't trade anything for all of my friends,
I'll love you girls until the end.

Love,
Christen
I LOVE YOU GIRLS

Dear Laur,

I can’t believe that we are finally seniors. I feel like everything has gone by so fast, but it went by with so many amazing memories that I will remember forever. I never really met anyone like you before, You’re a very special person. You’re thoughtful, loyal and kind but your best quality is your outgoing personality. Laur, you have this amazing personality which enables you to meet so many new and exciting people. Your never afraid to try new things which, is what makes you so much fun to be with. I love spending my time with you. In some ways we are total opposites but in others we are exactly the same. We have the best times together; times that no one has ever experienced except us and I never want them to end. You will always be my best friend and you will always have that special place in my heart. If you ever need anything, you know I will always be there no matter what the circumstances are. Even though at some point we will not always be together, I will never forget the special friendship we have. You and all the memories that fallow will never leave my heart. Thanks for always being there. I love ya!!!!!!

“Never be afraid of being alone, because you will always have me by your side.”

Dear Britt,

Our friendship means so much to me. No boy, no petty argument, nothing could ever come between the amazing bond we have. From a shoulder to cry on or a smile to laugh with you have always been there for me. I know I can trust you, not once have you turned your back on me. I feel so comfortable when I am around you. From dancing to relaxing we have crazy times together. You are a beautiful young lady that has the capability to be very successful in life. Never let anyone tell you other wise and never let anything get in the way of what your heart desires. You are all I could ask for in a best friend.

Love,
Lauren

We started off as little freshman, not knowing each other too well...now we are seniors and all good friends. We have had a lot of fun the past four years...making lots of memories...all the psych parties, playing huge volleyball, out to dinner after games, massage trains, the alma mater, rollerblading in the gym, yeah number 8!, Gurst throwing down his clip board, always down by 5, never have I ever..., passing to charlie, rubbing of the ear, the ball is light, the tournaments and games...and all the fun we had at practice. It was a great four years.
How lucky we are to have found friends that make saying goodbye so hard.

We stand together because if we should fall, we know we will be caught. We stand together because if we should cry, we know there is a shoulder to cry on. We stand together because if we should lose sight, we will be guided. But mostly, we stand together because we love each other. And because we love each other, we will always stand together, no matter the amount of land or ocean that divides us.

Jay –
Words can’t even describe how much I love you. You have touched me in a way that no one else has and because of that you will forever hold a special spot in my heart. Love Lilach.

Lilach –
What you’ve given me can’t be seen. It can’t be felt and it cannot die. You gave me a love that has kept me strong, formed my personality, and showed me a life of happiness. It is something so special to me that I cannot imagine my existence without it. And so I thank you for showing me what love is, and what life is, and what it means to be a best friend Love Jay wow senior year gone so fast, along with all those other years. So many years of love and friendship, sleepovers and movie watching. You know I always loved those awesome movies you had. And don't forget you always got the left side of that stupid pull out bed, and as the years went by my side started to collapse. That was definitely not cool. what can I say, our friendship means so much to me, probalbly more then you ever believed but i want you to know one thing. I don't think one day went by in my life where I didn't think of you.

Schminz,
Love you babe

ALISSA & LINDSAY

Lissy,
well, we've definately been through it all, but i can't wait to see what comes next. know that it won't matter where we end up because we will always be inseperable. have so many memories with you and i will carry a piece of you with me forever. trust you, i believe in you, and i will always love you. i want you to know that sometimes the things i say don't quite come out right, but i never would hurt you. you mean the most to me out of everyone i know so sometimes my emotions run wild. but that's why you love me! you're my bestest friend-you always, always will be.
Much love
Schminz

Tali-
Through thick and thin, we have been through everything. Bad boyfriends (hm?), bad grades, bad athletic performances, fight after fight. I think we've been to the end and back. But it only made our relationship stronger. Thanks for being my best friend. I love you. Good luck at college next year. I'll miss you.
Always,
Neely

Neely-
I don't know what to say. You've been through it all with me. Thank you for being there through my smiles, tears, love and cheers, that kept me going nonstop. Our favorite boys couldn't have summed it up better; you truly are "larger than life." Best friends for always. I love you.

Long is the road
we must travel on down.
Short are the legs
that will struggle behind.
I wish I knew for sure
just where we're bound,
What we will be doin'
and what we're gonna find.

Wherever we go, there will be birds to cheer you flower to color in the fields around.
Wherever we go, I'll be right here near you
You can't get lost when you're always found.

Okay if I hook; get into the groove. Wawa weekends, illegal lax boys, Wahoo anti-socials,
chai tea, Glenn?, keep the pants,
twem, neck brace, sprinkler run,
snowy prom, the poster, the keychain, hot to go. David is "special," the big O, green and yellow, orangatang, im fat-Lets eat, you liked me even when I looked like that?, foot in mouth, aren't you sick of me yet. Can I sleep in your bed?, stinky applebees, why do I get all the losers, trips to Diane's nifty fifties, silent conversations.
hippocrite, beheading teddy,
sleep swimming and crashing.
Slutmonkey, "she peed on the block?" the picture conspiracy.
tai food, Camden private part painting, get outta my head.
Mista ankal, shady secret

Psycho. Hey Ghostfeet, what's that stench?*
sleepovers on the deadly
Couch, he just didn't come.
Anna begins. Would be romantic places, "quickly" and "grrrr," table for two.

wish we were"
“If you live to be 100, I want to live to be 100 minus a day so I never have to live a day without you.”  – Piglet

These past years with you have been amazing ones. Beginning with our fun times back in middle school up through our high school days, we’ve shared so many incredible experiences. Maybe it’s your beautiful smile, your amazing good looks, your awesome voice, or your enchanting personality, but there is something about you that makes me smile every time I see you. You’ve been the best thing that has ever happened to me, and I am the luckiest person in the world to be your boyfriend. You’ll always be my girl. I love you.

Robbie –

The moment we met, I knew that you were “The One.” Your charm, strength, and smile completely enveloped me, and you’ve been my best friend ever since. You truly are the greatest person to walk into my life, and I am sure that our future holds nothing short of perfection. Every minute spent with you will forever remain in my heart. To my favorite guy the most wonderful, thoughtful, sweetest boyfriend –
thank you for providing me with support, friendship, and love. I love you.

Rob & Bar
Bennett Sisters
Lauren, Rachel, and Jaclyn

We have had our little tiffs as we tend to sometimes brawl and bicker
But with everlasting memories to last a lifetime everyone knows that blood is thicker.

We've seen it all together, we've laughed and cried through it hand in hand
And next year, while distance may separate us, our bond will still withstand.

Three Bennett sisters 'round the halls of East with good times that never end.
For we are more than just sisters, we are the very best of friends.

LAUREN AND SCOTT
A friend is one who knows all about you and still likes you

FRIENDS THEORY, Boo-Boo Lake-Quack, dysfunctional friendship, early morning escapes, being a hypocrite, separating the real from the fake, you're still here, singing songs in head, A.K and Bob, I'm smarter than you, curly toes, I won't tell anybody except for everybody, Phish at Merriweather, a learning experience, jello-shots, 2 fingers making circles, too much suction, Instant Analysis and Never Get Manipulated Again, at least I know I'm fake, Hooters-weenie boy, we know we're better, Pink is so ugly, black and blue marks, lotion-Moisteral, that's how I was raised syringes of spores, no communication, the brown blanket, get the spot, dollar bill drawings, in the closet, keys in Philly, Post Drunk Syndrome, pool table attempts, community D-speedline talks, waiting for the delivery, Brass Rails, in the ice box, body slam on beach, hockey stick attacks, 6/20/00, cell phone in water, just think happy thoughts.

In my life I loved you more
We're old enough to know better and too young to care

Adam
I just want you to know that you will always be the only consistent man in my life. You and I are two of a kind. We both do bad things, but inside we both have good hearts. I will never forget you and you will always be a part of me. You were the one who held me when I cried over my dad, Taylor, and all the other dramatic stuff I have been through. I cannot believe we have only been friends for 4 years because I feel like I have known you my whole life. I do not know who I would be if you were not there for me. I do not know how I would have survived high school with a smile on my face. We have all of our memories that will continue to grow, but most importantly, we have each other. We are two people who are real and true to each other and I hope we always remain so. Thanks for being in my life and for just existing because I cannot imagine my world without you in it. I love you....

Suzanne
I do not even know where to begin. Since eighth grade, we have been best friends, and through all our other groups of friends, it has always been you and me. We are as close as two friends can be, and I hope it never changes. You have been there with me through a divorce, death, and shared the happiest memories of my life. I know I can always turn to you for a sympathetic ear, and comforting words. Although we had some rough, times over the years I would not change a thing. Our past together can only pave the way for an even better future. I love you... New York here we come!
Emily & Laurel

A good friend is a person who holds your hand when you're scared, helps you fight off those who try to take advantage of you, thinks of you at times when you are not there, helps you put the past behind you but understands when you need to hold on to it a little longer, stays with you so that you have confidence, goes out of their way to make time for you, helps you clear up your mistakes, helps you deal with pressure from others, smiles for you when they are sad, helps you become a better person, and most importantly loves you!

ANDREA & SARAH ~~ BEST FRIENDS
FOREVER
Alissa,
First I got to say that you've gotten me through some of the hardest times in my life and I thank you for that. That I think is why your my best friend. For some strange reason we have the same problems and we can always get through them together. And just to let you know, I will always be there for you know matter how old and wrinkled we are. Yes, I will even be there if we don't get married like my mom always hoped. You will always be one of those special people in my heart and nothing will ever change that. As you start the next chapter in your life (cheezy, I know) I send my love.

Dave,
well man I'm speechless! So many years of friendship and much more to come. You have always been that little boy that I knew while watching goonies and munching out on rice krispies treats. I will never forget that wonderful day just as I will never forget you. I can't even believe that we are now entering a brand new stage in our lives, and I must say we came out as awesome people, and I believe we have each other to thank. I will always be there for you like I always have been and I expect you will be there to, you're a great person, friend, and most of all Dave you were always like my second brother and it will always be that way. I LOVE You Man!!!
Love always,
Little Lissa

Neely and Tali,
Sometimes people say that being friends with twins is like really being friends with one person. I find this so untrue. Both of you girls have affected my life in a different way. I cherish our friendships. I am so proud of you guys.

Laura,
It all began freshman year, an unforgettable journey. We have fought together, cried together, and grown together; and no matter what we will always be there for you. We love you. Good luck next year. We know you'll succeed.

When I first met you there was a little hostility over the Chinese food. After we broke through this tension, much confusion arose. But through all those rough times, we both came out with a smile. A smile when looking back on Philly adventures and car rides full of great music to sing along to. To much more driving and singing!!! I Love You Beautiful

love always,
Mike

Avery, always remember that the damn Chinese food gave us those matching fortunes which set in stone that we would be soul mates. Through all those good and bad times, no matter what the problem(Even if it was you) you were always the solution. You are the smile on my face, the best friend that will always be by my side, the shoulder I can cry on. But most importantly, you are the love that fills my heart. Avery you are the coolest dude I will ever meet. I Love You Abey!

love always and forever,
