Vol. XXVII

Each of our lives, like a novel, accounts an incredible story of personal growth. It is a narration of the events, large and small, that make us who we are. Though we move from moment to moment, planning our futures and anticipating challenges, we are not waiting to experience life. We are living it. Right here, right now. As the tale unfolds, the here’s and now’s are strung together. Page by page we encounter moments of laughter and joy, sadness and disappointment, youth and wisdom, and, finally, understanding. These pages describe our high school years, a chapter of our lives complete, yet eternal.

Cherry Hill High School East

Cherry Hill, New Jersey 08003
Where Were You On October 11, 1995?

The fate of a student's grade resting in his hand. Mr. Kovalevich goes over some papers. In his English 3A classes, Kovalevich prepares juniors for the SAT's with intensive vocabulary work and reading comprehension training.

Before dashing to lunch, Jamie Vill ('97) glances in her locker to see if she needs to bring anything else. Many people take advantage of their lunch period to finish some homework, which is usually due the next period.

Reading themselves for the corporate world, Kevin Suwald ('96) and Manuel Fonseca ('96) plan business strategy while taking inventory and calculating the profit of the school store.
At some point during the course of a hectic day, students need to take a "breather". Ilanit Cohen (96) catches a moment of rest before she heads to the locker room to change for gym.

During the fifth period lunch, Alla Bruleman (96), Jen Lee (96), Susan Kim (96), and Cathy Kim (96) try to eat and talk at the same time. "Senior year has been the best so far because I can talk to a lot of my friends during my lunch period, whereas in the years past, our schedules have conflicted," said Lee.

Up in third-floor C-wing, Jamie Rosenberg (96), Jo-Shin Tsang (96), Raymond Chang (96), and Edward Solovey (97) perform one of their weekly labs in AP Chemistry. "The objective of this lab was to determine the percent sulfate present in an unknown sample," said Chang.

Her pencil ready to take notes, Ilana Bleibrie (98) concentrates on the lecture in a US History I class. The US History I course covers American history from colonial times to the 1900's while US History II encompasses events from 1900 to present.
Microscope work is an integral part of every biology class. Using his hands for fine adjustment, Kenny Shih ('97) focuses on a paramecium during first period lab.

Following the old adage, “Practice makes perfect,” Michelle Tan ('96) hones her softball skills in her physical education class. Concentrating intently on the softball, Tan misses by only a narrow margin.
While waiting to take the senior portrait, Debbie Jacoby (’96) helps Drew Kresman (’96) to tie his tie. "Drew was embarrassed that he couldn't tie his own tie for pictures; so I had to help him," said Debbie.

In vertebrate anatomy, students strengthen their understanding through dissection. Cheryl Boby (’96) and Rizza Miao (’97) explore the internal systems of the shark using precise laboratory technique.

Hands On Training

Teach them— they will forget. Show them— they will remember. Let them do it themselves, and they will understand. To many East students, active learning is the most effective learning. Daily, students acquire new skills with hands on training.

Several classes at East focus on manual skills while many other incorporate hands on training into their curricula. From the arts of the sciences, students learn to work with their hands to accomplish their goals. They often find that this type of learning will stay with them in the years to come.

Many students learn best when they try tasks themselves. "In QPS labs, it's easy to operate the equipment after the teacher shows you, because then you can experience it firsthand," said Arnold Luk (’99).

When learning a new technique in art class, students find that it does not sink in until they actually try it. "Using my hands enables me to have better picture in my mind as to what I'm doing," said Tina Phillip (’96).

Through the whole spectrum of East's classes, hands on training plays a major role in learning. East students give hands on training two thumbs up.

Gauging the direction in which the compass is pointing, Mia Sorensen (’98) experiments with the tools of science and explores the ever-upgrading world of technology.
A Race Against Time

They plague East students from day to day, week to week, and even month to month. Students try in vain to wish them away or even ignore them, but they will not be vanquished. They continue to multiply haunting day and night, and become more menacing with the passage of time.

Deadlines, many people agree, are invading their lives. "Sometimes I become overwhelmed by the number of deadlines I have to meet. However, when I think of the many deadlines I impose on other people, especially the Eastside staff, I realize that despite our disdain for them, deadlines are indeed a necessity," said Jamie Lustbader ('96), Eastside's Editor-in-Chief.

East students combat deadlines of all types from regular homework assignments to SAT registration. "No matter how much we hate them, we must meet deadlines. I learned that lesson when I missed the application deadline for the SAT's about ten times, and ended up taking the SAT's in the June of my junior year," said Ed DiMarzio ('98).

In the grueling battle with deadlines students realize that the only way to conquer them is to meet them, on their own terms.

With only a few minutes to spare before English class, Marla Schneider ('96) crams the usual way - frantically skimming the Cliff Notes instead of reading the actual two page novel.

Using a few minutes before homeroom as study time, Gail Biege ('97) sits down to cram a few more bits of math into her head while she can. The procrastinators, a majority of East, often fall into the habit of cramming the period before the big exam.
Nikki Saltzburg (96) and Leslie Miller (96) intensely study music for honors choirs including East Singers. "Being in East Singers is an honor that requires much hard work but at the same time, it's a lot of fun," said Leslie Miller (96).

The pressure of gathering college information is anxiety-ridden enough without an approaching deadline. However, Nakisha Clark (96) and Shanella Ford (96) find themselves in the guidance office in a hasty search for the perfect college.

Robert Brownholtz (97) pours out all he has memorized onto the paper for his health test. Although some may believe otherwise, studying hard does pay off when the grades come around.

Standardized test dates represent stressful deadlines for most juniors and seniors. Jordan Blau (96) schedules an SAT date into his calendar while waiting for a guidance appointment.
With his sunglasses and chain bracelets, Chris Gendron ('97) practices for senior year. He takes a minute to observe the rest of his class working hard while he catches a few rays of sunlight by the window.

Posing as a true senior, Astana DeNaples-Hiller ('96) rests comfortably as she takes in a little Hemingway. Surviving the hectic days at East often means taking a break when you are supposed to be working.

No senior can doubt that high school is worth suffering through to get a driver's license at 17. Although Michele Rudner ('96) enjoys her driving privileges, she also recognizes one of the many responsibilities that comes with getting older -- driving safely.

A Time Of Change

Throughout their years at Cherry Hill East, students grow a little older and a great deal wiser. As Freshmen, they enter high school not knowing what to expect, and, as seniors, they leave uncertain of what the future holds, but after experiencing East life for four short years, students realize how much they have grown.

As upperclassmen look back on their high school years, they find that they have changed greatly, mostly for the better. "Over the past few years, I noticed that I've become a lot more confident and out-going," said Orit Raevsky ('97).

Students also find that their day to day experiences at East have taught them a lot. "I'm more mature and handle my problems more calmly than I did when I was a freshman," said Nikki Salzburg ('96).

Students agree that the positives of becoming older outweigh the negatives. "As I became a junior, I realized that I have a huge load of work and many more responsibilities but at the same time, I'm having a lot more fun," said Samuel Kang ('97).

Anticipating new freedoms and responsibilities as they leave high school, students realize that their time at East was truly a time of change.

Annie Rueschmier ('98) takes a step in the right direction. Growing up at East is about getting involved, and that often means having to take a bus ride for an away sports game.
High school: A time of standardized tests, harder courses, and growth spurts. Ben Brand ('96) demonstrates his victory over the obstacles of adolescence to Amy Katz ('99), who has yet to experience the range of problems with growing up.

During a grueling game with Triton High School, Ben Green received a wound while tackling the quarterback. “Part of his helmet or shoulder pads, I don’t know which, entered my face mask and produced a gash on the bridge of my nose. It bled heavily until it was bandaged,” said Green ('96). He fondly looks back on his football career, and plans to continue playing in college.
Kevin Suwalt ('96) masters the tools of the trade in woodshop. Open to all grades, woodshop allows students to create their own designs of everything from birdhouses to bookshelves.

Thi Young ('98) pauses to mill over the shape which her creation will take. Cutting and cartooning are two important components of commercial art production.
Julie Potterian ('96) styles the hair of her mannequin with rollers. Cosmetology allows students to cut and design hairstyles they would never experiment with on their own hair.

The sound of music permeates the halls as Katie and Betsy Nees ('97) practice their piano skills, working together to create their own type of art. They show that originality and friendships are linked together.

Tapping Into The Imagination Of East

With self-expression as their guideline, and creativity as their instruction manual, students find happiness in producing works of art.

For many students, the act of creating not only promotes a sense of achievement, but also encourages self-awareness. "I like drawing cartoons and realistic art because it allows me to escape to another world and use my imagination," said Teddy DePrince ('98).

Miss Sacca, who teaches all levels of painting, emphasizes the importance of putting emotions down on canvas. "Creativity is the ability to change inner thoughts and express oneself in a new and exciting way, whether it be in the fine arts, music, science, or dance," said Sacca.

Creating original pieces allows students to communicate their ideas and emotions to others, and at the same time learn more about themselves. "When I fool around on the piano, certain feelings I have at the time are reflected. From this I can compose music that emanates my various emotions," said Mark Kramer ('97).

For East students, the beauty of creating lies not only in the product of their creation but in the process that leads to it.

With her colorful palette and graceful strokes, Jen Tomar ('96) creates a work of art that any critic would admire. Painting is a skill which takes years of practice to acquire.
Through the tests and the term papers, the criticism and the praise, bonds between teachers and students extend beyond the classroom. During high school, students learn much more from their teachers than pure subject matter, and teachers, on occasion, learn from their students.

During after school activities, teachers and students truly get to know one another. "While working with Mr. Young, the advisor for Adopt-A-Grandparent, I learned what a caring person he is," said Sheryl Patel (98). Students find out what their teachers are really like after spending many hours with them both during school, and after classes. "Even though we dislike them when they give us an abundant amount of homework or an incredibly hard. I think the teachers here at East teach us more than just what's in the textbook. They teach us how to be better people," said Noeen Ahmad (96). At East, teachers have a tremendous impact on their students.

Not only instructing in class, but before and after school as well, teachers offer their students countless hours of guidance. "Most of the faculty here at East is amazing, they are solely dedicated to education, and they never become unapproachable teaching machines," said Rohanna Mohamed (96). Many students appreciate the extra time teachers put in for their students. "A very special teacher for me, Mrs. Malloy was always there when I needed her. I fondly remember the days of receiving my daily portion of extra help before and after school," said Jeff Barmach (96). After working side by side, students and teachers find, the bond that emerge much too precious to abandon.
Joelyn Sharff ('96) jokes with Mr. Malatesta. As student government and class advisor for seniors, he has spent the past four years putting up with various student antics.

Teachers are always available to guide students in their coursework. Focusing on shark anatomy, Mr. Vladimir Vranich explains how structure meets function to students Matt Lanza ('96) and Cheryl Boby ('96).

Mr. Bennathan explains a physics concept to Jeff Barrach ('96). Teachers at East often go out of their way and spend a little extra time with students to help them grasp fundamental concepts.
After a grueling game of tennis, Jeff Simons (’96) and Tony Zappasodi (’96) relax by the courts. Besides playing tennis together, Zappasodi and Simons have worked with each other as the president and the publicity manager of the Student Government Association. “Tony may be a good president, but he’s a lousy tennis player,” said Simons.

Throughout the generations, guys have been known to hang together and at East there are no exceptions. Leon Huff (’98), Alex Ortiz (’99), Mike Dandie (’98), and Marvin Alexander (’98) intently wait for the late bus to arrive.

Although reading a difficult text may not be the most enjoyable way to spend a lunch period, Kayce Cherry (’96) and Michele Van De Kijn (’96) manage to share a few laughs.

After slaving away in the kitchen all period, Mark Harris (’96) and Miles Fullard (’96) enjoy the fruits of their labor. Harris, a little apprehensive to taste his creation, lets Fullard try it first.
During the course of a hectic East day, friends find time to see each other on their way to class. Headed for "Respect for Drugs," Sandra Grossman (96) and Melanie Butler (96) make their way to the Little Theater.

Many long-lasting friendships bud from relationships formed in high school. Lisa Levin (96), Courtney Smith (96), Allison Singer (96) hope to remain friends for life.

Sending balloon-grams is one way of telling a friend how special she is. Elysia Polma (98) strengthens the friendship bond between her and Masine Stewart (98) by sending a "Happy Birthday" message with balloons.

Erin Weaver (98), already arriving fashionably late to school, postpones the inevitable day by conversing with her friend and Student Host, Beth Finch (96). Beth herself can enjoy an easy day of missing classes while, unlike tardy Erin, she is present and accounted for at the attendance office.

Paula Park (96), unlike her attentive classmate Alex Orlowski (96), takes a break from her classroom chores to enjoy a mid-morning snack. Although lunch is looming in the near future for her and for most students, she feels compelled to answer swiftly to hunger's demands.

Rather than pass the day in the mundane classroom atmosphere, seniors Lesley Dritsowater and Kristen Stone spend theirs in the sublime nature of the outside snowfall. The playful tendencies of students always compel them to look outside the window during a snowstorm and wish to be out playing in the grass.

Second period study hall has become a haven from late night studying for seniors Jackie Lichtman and Audrey Allen. Here, instead of taking orders from teachers, students have their own way with their free time, whether it be in studying or having fun.
The Ants Are Marching
Students Become Restless During The School Day

Lost in a sea of about 1750, students at East struggle to display their individuality. Whether it is during the five minutes between classes where students run around frantically waving "hi" to all the friends they haven't seen, kicking back their feet outside in the courtyard during lunch, or allowing chaos to rule the classroom when the teachers step out for a minute— the school day is flexible enough for a student to be him or herself. Even in the confines of East, students find that they still have the opportunity to enjoy the day, taking time to savor the moments that make each day unique, each person special, and each group of friends themselves.

While sharing a tray of fries together, Aaron Edell ('96) and Amelia Valero ('96) manage to find an unknown corner of the school just to sit and talk quietly. With a little exploration, students can find various nooks and crannies of the school in which to hide from schoolwork and teachers. For people like Aaron and Amelia, lunch serves as a time to escape thinking and get to the real purpose of school—chatting with friends.

Since most teachers do not appreciate students blowing bubbles during their classes, Anna Heinke ('98) has to wait until after school to satisfy her urge. Sure, she is enjoying her gum now. But eventually, it will become a sticky lump under a desk and may even wind up tangled in someone's hair.

"School is like Play-doh. It's only fun when you make something out of it."
Brian Chow ('97)

Played purely for the fun and sport, gum basketball is a welcomed recreation from the drudgery of academia for seniors Josh Hundert and Ryan Katz. Even with the lack of footwear, Katz is still able to shoot over his sneakered foe Hundert in a friendly pick-up game.
Spirit Week At East...

Union And Solidarity

Spirit Week, East’s annual celebration of school pride and appreciation is a time for students to come together, working and playing together to raise the spirits of the entire school. The different grades compete in various activities such as booth and float construction, musical chairs, trivia, and the pep rally in the hopes of standing out amongst their fellow students. The hard work after school and the spirited play ably display East students’ devotion to their classmates, who are also their friends. Although competition arises among classes, the ultimate focus falls upon Cherry Hill East spirit. Senior Vikash Panda said, “In my first year participating in Spirit Week, I found that, although many people think that Spirit Week separated the classes, it, in fact, unifies the entire school by getting everybody involved in school activities.” The rivalry brings out the best of each class to enrich the school as a whole, proving that the whole is indeed greater than the sum of the parts.

The Spirit of competition is fierce as, in the last few days of Spirit Week 1995, the juniors and the seniors vie for first place. Nonetheless, the attitude was good-natured and the traditional rivalry raised the overall school spirit.

Seniors Hyunae Chang, Vikash Panda, and Abe Vernick put the final touches on what will become a palm tree for the senior class booth. This comradeship in working for a greater purpose embodies the selfless spirit of Spirit Week.

The pep rally, one of the many highlights of Spirit Week, allows students to step out of the classroom to celebrate the school. Louis V. ('96) does a balancing act while trying to steer the tricycle. Events like this allow students to try their best at any cost to help their classmates.
The Seniors, the perennial winners of Spirit Week, demonstrate their love for East with continued participation in Spirit Week activities. Michelle Van De Rijn, Robin Weitz, Corrie Rudin, Abby Radbill, Amanda Hartung, Joanna Stahl, and Kayce Cherry combine to unite the school.

"Our class showed more comradery than ever before; this is what leads us to victory," said Hartung.

Burke Glover ('96) shows his intense enthusiasm toward the senior class during Pep Rally activities. Glover encourages his fellow seniors to show their support by starting "the wave" in the crowd.

Juniors Alyssa Feinsmith, Adam Scott, Rebecca Rosner, and Ellen Hur spend a long day after school to help with their booth. Although their individual efforts may go unnoticed, these students take pride in their individual work and for their school.

Getting psyched for the upcoming game, the Juniors renew team spirit as they prepare to play volleyball. In the end, the Juniors managed a glorious defeat over the sophomores. Chien Chow ('97) remarks, "The sophomores were good opponents, but I think that our team unity gave us an edge that allowed us to win volleyball at Spirit Week."
IN THIS JUNGLE . . .

Homecoming '95
Peace and rest at length have come.
All the day's long toil is past;
And each heart is whispering "Home, Home at last!"

-HOOD, Home at Last

In the crowd, seniors Lauren Shorr, Lauren Goldstein, and Tanya Buzzetta display their high-spirited enthusiasm not only for the football team, but also for the school. These small parts of the school, the ones that support and unite, are the real foundation of Cherry Hill East.
THE COUGAR IS KING

Stephanie Croce ('97) shows that, by providing players with water, the behind the scenes effort for East’s football games does not go unnoticed. Beyond the field, on the sidelines and in the crowd, the presence of East students proves that the football games mean so much more to the school than just a simple sports exhibition.

Although Joanna Stahl ('96) would rather be somewhere warmer, she still shows her school spirit by coming out to cheer the football team at the Homecoming game. She waits patiently on the sidelines watching East defeat West.

The seniors make their presence known as they come roaring into the Homecoming game. Along with the float as the finished product, the seniors will also remember the creativity and hard work put into the event.

Seniors Ari Steckman and Abbe Vernick brave the cold to support both the team and the school on Thanksgiving Day, proving that friends with a smile are enough to keep each other warm.

East students show the pride they have in their school at the Homecoming Game. The Homecoming Game, held at the end of Spirit Week each year, brings out the friendly competition between East and West, prompting both sets of students to show their school spirit in creative ways.

The Rotary Youth Leadership Conference, a five-day program at Stockton State College, aims to increase leadership qualities among students. Speakers such as Gene Hart and Lee Solomon demonstrated the importance of leadership in public life to the participants. These seminars help students to apply what they learn in school to real life situations.

Production of East's award-winning yearbook begins in the spring of the prior year. Jeff Barnach (96), Editor in Chief, assists Activities Editor, Debbie Luk, in creating an attractive layout. "Leadership and dedication along with a hardworking staff produce a quality yearbook," said Barnach.

As she plans upcoming activities with advisor Mr. Scheidler, Jenn Lee (96), president of the Cum Laude Society, leads the group in "directing and maintaining the club's goal: to promote education."

Spending a week in the middle of July simulating municipal, county, and state level governments hardly seems like the ideal summer hobby. But for the boys of Boys' State from East, the experience was highly rewarding. "Although I was already familiar with some of the material taught, what I did learn truly amazed me," said Raymond Chang (96).

American Legion Jersey Boys' State: Phillip Ciprietti, Matthew Selverian, John Pyne, Robert Linden, Edward DiMarco, Raymond Chang, Howard Yeh, Bobby Chang.
After going into an intense week of active discussion and political campaigning, those from East chosen for Girls' State came out with more than just knowledge of state government procedures. Nancy Chawla ('96), who attended the program, said, "Sometimes as a female you tend to doubt yourself. Girls' State can take the best young women of New Jersey and turn them into excellent, strong leaders."

For Audrey Allen ('96), attending the Girls' Career Institute at Douglass College gave her a boost of self-confidence along with a general knowledge of careers ranging from an FBI agent to a clown. "Knowing that you can do as well as any man in a job really helps when it comes to being a successful leader at the work place."

American Legion Jersey Girls' State: Elizabeth Elas, Deepa Krishnan, Sara Bluhm, Rebecca Ruschmeier, Nancy Chawla, Nicole Saltzburg, Rachel Katz.

"Team success depends upon keeping the team's spirit alive and preserving our lead. The responsibility for maintaining team stability falls upon the team leaders, on and off the field."
Bridget Hawksley ('96)
Varsity Field Hockey Captain

"To be a good leader, an individual must talk to people, know right from wrong, and have a strong feeling for what that person wants to do. Within all of us there is a leader. We just work hard to bring it out."
Tony Zappasodi ('96)
SQA President

"Communicating ideas clearly, holding people's attention, and having the respect of the people one works with characterize a good leader. That person must not only lead, but also be a part of the group itself."
Shannon Walters ('97)
SAGE Chairperson

"Energy, enthusiasm, determination, a know-how in handling people, and most importantly, a love for what you are doing are the pieces that make up a good leader."
Jonathan Ross ('96)
Theatrical Society Vice President, Madrigals Co-Coordinator
Rising Above The Rest
Acknowledging East’s Finest

New Jersey Scholars, the Junior Miss Competition, and Governor’s School are three programs that allow East students to demonstrate their talents. After being nominated by the school, an applicant to the New Jersey Scholars program must undergo an interview and fill out a lengthy application that includes three essays before being selected to participate. The program takes place during the summer between junior and senior year. Over a period of four weeks, students from all over the state take an interdisciplinary approach to one topic. NJ Scholar Monica Kim (’96) said, “I’ve never experienced such an eclectic mix of learning. Interacting with a tightly-knit group of students both inside and outside the classroom creates a peculiar intellectual energy.” In 1996, while studying the scientific, historical, musical, literary, and religious aspect of the Renaissance, the participants went on field trips to the Metropolitan Museum of Art and to a Broadway production of Hamlet.

Junior Miss provides another opportunity for East students to shine. This competition at East, consisting of an interview, an individual talent portion, and a demonstration of athletic fitness, allows the contestants to display a wide array of talent. Liz Elias, winner East’s Junior Miss Competition, then went on to become first runner-up at the Camden County Junior Miss Competition. Besides the honor of being selected to represent East, the rewards include a college scholarship.

The Governor’s Schools are four statewide summer programs designed to enhance a student’s learning in his or her concentrated studies. The Governor’s School of the Arts allows students gifted in music, writing, dance, theater, and visual arts to strengthen their creative skills and to explore artistic philosophies and methods. The Governor’s School of Public Issues acquaints students with the workings of governments and public debate. Rachel Katz (’96), a participant in the Governor’s School in the Sciences, said, “It was a positive social and academic experience because the classes were challenging and interesting, and I like being with people my age who share my interests.” The Governor’s School on the Environment studies the relationships between societies and their environments and the roles of human beings in creating environmental change.

Liz Elias, the winner of this year’s Junior Miss Competition, is noted for her eloquence, charisma, and wide array of talents, such as acting and singing. These qualities combined with a little luck won her the title of Junior Miss. “I’m really glad I had the experience of the Junior Miss program. It was a great way to explore what I had inside myself and see it present in so many girls.”

Jennifer Ke (’96), East representative to the Governor’s School for the Arts, has demonstrated a superior musical talent throughout her life at East. Musical accolades such as first chair in the All-South Jersey Orchestra and second chair in the All-State Orchestra, along with her musical achievements at East, have earned her a place in the Governor’s School Program. She excelled at this higher learning, calling Governor’s School “an amazing experience because everyone around me showed so much interest and so much talent.

Although the panel of Junior Miss judges seem menacing at first, they try to make the candidate as comfortable as possible. “The judges’ smiles put me at ease, and the relaxed atmosphere brought confidence to my answers and strength to my poise,” said Nancy Chawla (’96), a Junior Miss competitor.

Attempting to break through his imperspectable "male chauvinist" barrier, Monica Kim (’96) shows Mr. Matthew Carr her essay, written during the New Jersey Scholars Program, on the patriarchal society in the Renaissance. Unfortunately, Mr. Carr knits his brow, signaling an even more perplexed state of confusion.

26 Special Recognition
Junior Miss candidates Liz Elias (96), Jaclyn Lichtman (96), Jenn Lee (96), and Helen Jen (96) practice a two minute dance routine that integrates rhythm, coordination, and endurance. “I enjoyed participating in the Junior Miss Competition because I found it to be so much more than a typical ‘beauty pageant’. Ability played the most important part in the judges’ decisions,” said Helen Jen (96).

Revelling In The Spotlight

East's Annual Battle Of The Bands And Mr. East Shows

Dressed to kill as supermodel RuPaul, Gregg Goldenberg ('96), Mr. Personality, shows his audience how to turn the right, then shante, shante. Gregg's masterful performance served as a welcomed comic relief to an already fun night.

Jason Lefkowitz ('96), hoisted up for a ride to victory from his fellow contestants, rules this particular moment in his life. The announcement of the 1996 Mr. East brought a heartfelt tear to even Mr. Boombastic himself.

During the swimwear portion of the competition, Mr. Country Western Matt Selvarian ('96) shows his love for the cowboy life. Though the westerns have lost their appeal, Matt, for a moment, triumphs as the cowboy.

Josh Hundert ('96) and his brother Joey ('99) perform their versions of the Grateful Dead's "Cosmic Charlie." His laid back attitude and voice were perfectly suited for the mellow, relaxed night of fun at Mr. East.
Jason Selim ('97) reigns supreme on stage during the performance of Jerry and the Ladies in the Battle of the Bands. This frenzied excitement reflected the intense atmosphere of the entire crowd as the students found a chance to have fun together and to cheer their friends.

Winners of Battle of the Bands, Kamehameha received the chance to play for the Mr. East audience during intermissions. They used this opportunity to perform some of their Eighties favorites including Bon Jovi's "Dead or Alive" and "I'll Be There For You."

Jake Peltzman ('96), Mr. Pillows, showcases the talent that he displays during East basketball games. Although his skills are not shown on the floor, his presence is welcomed as the cheerleader in the crowds.

The crowd went wild as Mr. Italian Stallion Nick Bruno ('96) came strutting down the aisle to the tune of "Stayin' Alive". As he brought his Saturday Night Fever on-stage, he brought with him the rebirth of disco.

Mr. Midget Mark Tamburrino ('96) shows his talent for hula dancing during the talent portion of Mr. East. Mark was a crowd favorite as the audience embraced his rendition of "Don't Worry, Be Happy."
On October 22, the Juniors and Seniors clashed in the fifteenth annual Powder Puff Football Game. The Powder Puff is a yearly event open to junior and senior girls who want to play competitive football. In an incredibly close game, the seniors took control by scoring a field goal in overtime. But the game wasn’t over yet—the Juniors had four downs to score a field goal to tie or a touchdown to win. On their first down, the Juniors scored a touchdown to make a final score of 12 to 9, taking the winner’s place.

Members of the East football team, the coaches, helped the girls refine their skills to prepare for the game. Although practices were rough, both coaches and players had a great time working together. “It was fun,” said Junior coach Frank Zmuda, “seeing what it was like when I progressed as a football player.”

After hours of practice, the Seniors were understandably a bit disgruntled about the unbelievably close game. “We really worked hard and it was a disappointing loss,” said Liz Brawerman (96). However, all the players enjoyed the experience. “It was exciting because it’s the only sport where there’s not any real pressure,” said Ashleigh Goldberg (97). Because everyone worked hard while having fun, everybody was a winner.

The ferocity showing in her eyes, Christine Brusato (96) takes her position as right linebacker during the Power Puff game. “It was the competitive drive to win that brought intensity to the game, but it was the energy of that game that brought excitement to the day,” said Brusato.

The Junior Powder Puff players mob to congratulate Christine Farrell (97), who scored the winning touchdown in the last minutes of the game to clinch the victory for the Juniors, with the final score of 12-9.

Remembering the skills they learned in their practices, the Powder Puff coaches apply them on the field for a showdown between the Juniors and the Seniors. Here, Senior Powder Puff coach and East football player Marc Harris, gives strategic pointers and encouragement to the players.

With a determined look in her eye, Tanya Buzzetta ('96) shows perfect form as she prepares to dodge her Junior opponents. This year's Powder Puff game was incredibly close, proving that every action in the game makes a difference.

As seniors Jaclyn Kaplan and Lauren Goldstein prepare for the play, quarterback Audrey Allen ('96), in a hard count, calls for the snap from center Monica Rodriguez. With their potent offense, each snap of the ball represents a potential touchdown.
Singing a Spanish Ballad during the Winter Choral Concert, Jamie Cerota ('96) displays her vocal talent. Using her operatic success, Cerota will graduate East a year early to pursue her performing career.

Volunteer Student Firefighters

Behind the scenes, in the auditorium balcony, T.R. Weaver ('96) works the lights for the Battle of the Bands Show. Throughout his years in set design, T.R. has gained an expertise in designing and controlling lighting systems. Even before entering college, T.R. has had past experiences for the Gloucester Township Center for the Arts and the Philadelphia Academy of Music.
A Head Start Towards The Real World

For East Students, The Future Is Now

Even in their years at East, some students break free in new and exciting ways. While East provides an academic learning experience, through years of training on their own, certain individuals have learned enough in their respected fields to apply their knowledge to the outside. Whether it be in the performing arts, medicine or even politics, they have shown themselves willing and able to survive in the real world. In a grown-up world, they find that they have suddenly grown up. In the years to come, and maybe even now, as they find their places in the world, they will learn a little bit about themselves. Said Paula Park (96), “It’s about being yourself, and letting the world know it.”

Anthony Martinez (96), attending a town meeting called by United States Congressman Robert E. Andrews, has the opportunity to work in a government position before his career has even begun. As an office intern, Anthony deals one on one with actual clients while working in an office atmosphere.

Paula Park (96) dances the part of the candy cane in the Pennsylvania Ballet production of Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker. During her years of training in dance, Paula has performed for more than six years with the prestigious Pennsylvania Ballet, and has later danced in productions for the Academy of Vocal Arts and the Pennsylvania Academy of Ballet.
A Celebration Of Life

Throughout a student’s high school years, through all the studying, cramming in the homework, and worrying about school, a student learns also from his or her time away from school. The student learns about life. He or she learns that life is about rising above one’s struggles to face the world, with a joy of living. Students celebrate not from obligation, but rather from a genuine desire to appreciate and to be proud of their accomplishments, and of their lives. In these times, students forget about their troubles to enjoy the moment. These are the moments for which one lives.

As the first dance of the year, the Kickoff Dance provides students with the opportunity to spend time with friends they missed over the summer. Suzanne Pelaz (’97), Deepa Krishnan (’96), and Tina Kang (’97) enjoy good music and the company of friends.

Tony Zappasodi (’96) and his young friend Louie share a holiday moment at Dr. Vivone’s English class Christmas party. Said Zappasodi, “It made me feel really good inside to help the kids and give them presents from ‘Santa’. Seeing their happiness and enjoyment is gratification enough for the work that we all did.”

Celebrating the arrival of winter, Anita Emma (’97) and Jordan Blau (’96) hang up exquisite snowflake cutouts in the attendance office. This winter certainly caused some reasons to celebrate with the holidays, and to the delight of many students, school closings and delayed openings.

At the Pep Rally, the football players celebrate the end of a good season through a rough tumble on the gym floor. The pileup not only ends the season on a good note, but also fires them up for the Banquet Meeting.

Members of Joseph — Marie Howey (’96), Anthony Martinez (’96), Stefanie Cohen (’96), and Mandy Biberman (’96), cluster together amid the clutter of the Joseph cast party. The cast partly serves as a festive reward for a job well done.
At the Junior Prom, Mike Greenberg ('97) smiles with pleasure after checking himself in the mirror from top hat to polished shoes. After all, the perfect night begins with the perfect attire. With the right date and the perfect night, the prom will become a memory that will last forever.

Unfortunately, most East students are forced to attend school on their birthdays, but that doesn’t stop them from celebrating. Kristen Stone ('96) brings festive balloons to brighten Melissa Russo’s ('97) birthday.

A time for partying, friends, and fun, Project Graduation provides a chance for Tina Philip ('96) and Shury Nnan ('96) to bond. Creating a bittersweet mood for their last celebration together, seniors regret having to say goodbye while preserving the final moments of senior year fun.

Commencement, the ultimate celebration of high school life, is a celebration of not only the high school life, but also of the life beyond high school. A nostalgic look back will soon become an openness to the future, a future which we have waited for our whole lives.
Breaking Barriers With Language

Certain things are considered truly American. For example: Mom and apple pie. At East, students find these things along with croissants and ... Greek gods?

Language clubs have the difficult job of planning activities that enforce the language and teach the culture. So what kinds of things do these clubs do, exactly?

How about a festival honoring the Greek god Saturn? The Latin Club did just that by celebrating "Satmalia," a banquet with plenty of food and games.

The Spanish, French, and German clubs all feed themselves culturally by going to restaurants. The French club plans trips to the Restaurant School to sample French cuisine, while the German club plans restaurant trips to New York and Philadelphia.

From their croissant sales, the French Club was able to see a new version of Les Miserables. The Spanish club teaches students that in-school activities can be just as fun. Often at parties, they have pinatas and traditional Spanish foods.

So, it's official. Language clubs give East students opportunities to eat, sleep, and breathe different cultures.

In a Latin club banquet celebrating the Greek God, Saturn, Susan Kim (96) feeds Devon Segal (98) one of the foods available in ancient Greece.

Donating $400 to the Julio Iglesias Scholarship Fund, Spanish club officers Trey Ullrich (95) Laurie Manus (96) and Nicole Carquettela (96) present a check to the singer backstage.

From the home office in Latin II: Bulletin Board decorating is just one of the requirements in Latin II, where students learn basic grammar. Top Ten Lists provide a fun way for students to summarize what they learned in a year.

TOP TEN REASONS TO TAKE LATIN:
10. Gives the student a history of Roman times.
9. It is the basis of the English language.
8. It is the basis of many other languages.
7. It gives us the chance to make Latin bulletin boards.
5. Gives us the ability to communicate with the pope.
4. Be able to read the original versions of literature like the Iliad and the Odyssey.
3. Helps raise your SAT scores.
2. Gives us great clubs like Certamen and Latin Club.
1. But most of all... It gives us great Latin teachers like Dr. Ford!!

Members Ruth Worrel (97), Greg Gadren (96), Dipati Ghosh (96), and Carla Mawrodin (97) along side Advisor Mrs. Sokolov, raise money for cultural trips such as museum visits and French dinners by selling croissants.

LATIN CLUB: JoJo Adolfo-Mensah, Kwesi Aldolfo-Mensa, Adam Badzin, Stuart Brooks, Anne Chu, Leslie Fabelllo, Rashad Foley, Devon Glick, Guv Gurii, Jignasa Gusari, Karen Ho, Susan Kim, Jen Lee, Andy Lu, Lauren Massaro, Brooke Neumann, Joanna Olsen, Devon Segal, Dave Trager, Sophia Zarembki. Adviser: Mrs. Hamell.

GERMAN CLUB: Matthew Lanza (Pres), Markian Dzahawetz (Vice Pres), Anthony Martinez (Sec-Treas), Kyle Smith (Publicity). Daniel Baratz, Joe Churn, Diana Chung, Christine Grapes, Carol Kim, Jason Kim, Lynnette Kim, Mark Kramer, Nick Kuentzel, Jason Kuo, J. H. Lee, Brad Nation, Robby Richman, Ketawanda Serdji, Noel Szypier, Melissa Schorr, Noah Schwartz, Seth Speerlein, Lisa Wong, Jia Yoon. Adviser: Mr. Moehlmann.

FRENCH CLUB: Ellen Miller (Pres), Dipasri Ghosh (V-Pres), Sara Blaum (Sec-Treas), Alanna Amster, Pallavi Ojha, Keri Brady, Justin Brown, Hannah Byun, Elaine Carroll, Anne Chu, Cecile Desplanques, Helen Desplanques, Karen DiBiase, Greg Gaiden, Sally Gerges, Lauren Goldstein, Amy Littman, Teresa Liao, Vincent Liu, Michael Martin, Carla Savoini, Susan Meuse, MaryAnn O'Donnell, Pallavi Ojha, Christine Parker, Yang Rae Ro, Mike Silberman, Lauren Slawsky, Adviser: Mrs. Sokolov.

Expand Your World

Sam Desai ('97) and Deepa Krishnan ('96) learn more about their culture by reading the Bhagavad-Gita. Members of the Indian Cultural Society become more familiar with their culture through reading as well as through special events.

With satisfaction, Erika Bullock ('96) informs members of the award they received for their Camden food drive. The African American Club demonstrates its good citizenship by participating in community services.

Sheryl Patel ('98) jots down some ideas for possible future activities at an Indian Cultural Society meeting. ICS promotes their culture through various fun and informative activities.

No one goes through East without hearing Mr. Belchikoff's familiar phrase: "East is a buffet." East is a "buffet" of cultures. Culture clubs, such as the African American Club, the Asian Culture Society, the Indian Cultural Society, and the Korean Culture Club, have formed to spread cultures that the student body may be unfamiliar with. Nam Ye Kim ('96) of the Korean Culture Club, said, "It's important that everyone know their heritage." Kriti Gwal ('98) said, "I want other people to understand where I'm coming from, and to understand where I'm coming from, you have to understand my culture." However, Austin Wang ('96), an ACS officer remarks, "Since racism stems from ignorance, I hope to spread our culture, educating the people so they can have a more cosmopolitan view of the world." Erika Bullock ('96), president of the African American Club agrees, "Spreading culture is fundamental to eliminate prejudices." The culture clubs aren't just all talk, though. Monica Kim ('96) said, "ACS tries to spread culture through activities such as learning taichi, having banquets with Asian food, and visiting monasteries." Thus, the culture clubs celebrate the rich cultural heritage that Cherry Hill East has to offer.

Under officers Cathy Kim ('96), Nam Ye Kim ('96), Richard Song ('96), and Louis Yi ('96), Korean Culture Club continues growing. "This club has been very successful in the past and it gets bigger and better every year!" said Nam Ye Kim.

Preparing for their upcoming Holiday Food Drive, Jen Lee ('96) and James Byun ('97) paint signs advertising the event. Like African American Club, the Asian Cultural Society also advocates community service.

Acronyms For Awareness

To the student body at East, SAGE, GLOBE, and TOPS spell out awareness by educating students about issues affecting their daily lives.

SAGE (Students Allied for Gender Equity) is comprised of males and females interested in equality between the sexes, focusing on issues from sexism in education to gender portrayal in media. "A gender equity group is important... so that students can go out into the real world more knowledgeable of gender issues," said Shannon Walters '97, chairperson of SAGE.

GLOBE (Global Learning and Observation of the Environment) promotes environmental awareness through first-hand research. After measuring the local climate, students send their observations to the Internet's GLOBE center, where it is then processed nationwide. "In order to protect our planet, we must understand how it works," said Dr. Kim, the club's advisor.

TOPS (Teens Organized to Prevent Smoking) educates students in grades kindergarten through eighth about the dangers of tobacco abuse by giving presentations at local schools. "It's really crucial to get the message across to younger kids because they are at a very impressionable age," said Amanda Hartung '96, overall chairperson of TOPS.

Together, these Acronyms for Awareness help Cherry Hill East students become more informed of their surroundings.

Every SAGE meeting encourages members to ponder over the reality of gender discrimination. Members Naomi Faizkyl '96, Nancy King '97, Rosa Yoo '97, and Mr. Simon contemplate the grim statistics of sexism in education, trying to come up with solutions to this pressing problem.

At the first meeting of GLOBE, members Amy Levin '97, and Dave Lauer '97 discuss this year's goals. Buying rain forest land and allying with the Camden County Environment Council are first in GLOBE's "Things to do" list.

Sam Ritterman '96, an active member of SAGE, chuckles at some of the nuances in advertisement. Several of SAGE's meetings are dedicated to gender stereotypes that the media perpetuates.
Ed DiMarzio discusses sexual harassment at a SAGE seminar. As a part of their efforts to promote gender equality, SAGE often has guest speakers give special presentations about the topic. "Sexual harassment is a real problem that we often tend to overlook or ignore, and it is dangerous to do so," said DiMarzio.

GLOBE: Pawan Reddy (Pres.), Dave Laufer (Vice Pres.), Amy Levin (Vice Pres.), Julian Chang, Peter Chang, Mike Choi, Chien Chow, Shannen Dunfee, Devon Glick, Nancy King, Vince Liu, Ajit Pai, Steve Sust. Adviser: Dr. Kim.

Amanda Hartung (‘96), Rosa Wu (‘99), and Stacey Costol (‘97) run through a skit in preparation for an upcoming presentation at an elementary school. Skits are just one of the many ways in which TOPS helps teach drug prevention.
Naomi Faszczyk ('96) donates canned food to the first drive sponsored by three of East's clubs: Amnesty International, Cum Laude Honor Society, and Asian Cultural Society.

AIDS Awareness meetings often feature guest speakers who offer unique information to the group. Member Angel Ling ('96) enjoys the presentation of a speaker from the AIDS Coalition of South Jersey.

East offers several organizations that examine the conflicts people face day to day and in other parts of the world. Surrounded by organizations such as Natural Helpers, Peer Mediation, AIDS Awareness, and Amnesty International, students learn how to deal with conflicts effectively.

Natural Helpers teaches students to use their natural abilities to help resolve issues that many teenagers face. "Our role is to listen to people talk about their problems and help them reach their own solutions," said Nikki Renella ('97).

Peer Mediation, another organization aimed to resolve conflicts, focuses a non-violent approach to overcoming disagreements between peers. Members of the group encourage students to discuss their problems rationally and avoid angry confrontations.

AIDS Awareness stands by the principle of open-mindedness by informing students about the disease through assemblies and guest speakers.

On a global scale, Amnesty International shows students the "right" way to battle injustice. Through letter-writing campaigns and petitions, students learn that the pen is mightier than the sword.

Spreading Harmony
AIDS Awareness’s most lucrative fundraiser is its annual T-shirt sale. Officers Lauren Morgan (’96), Aisha Porter (’96), and Beckee Wadler (’96) show club members a sample T-shirt.

This year, Natural Helpers had the special opportunity to help Big Al counsel students during his “Do Hugs Not Drugs” Program. Amy Goldberg (’96) and Lisa MacGregor (’96) listen while he offers counseling tips.

Sitting nervously, Heidi Wenderoth ('96) gives the nurse important medical information about herself before she gives blood. The Blood Drive gives East students the opportunity to save five lives with just one donation.

Members of Adopt-A-Grandparent visit Meridian Nursing Home regularly to spend more time with their elderly friends. Jen Boyle's ('99) sings Christmas carols at their annual holiday party.

BLOOD DRIVE CHAIRPEOPLE: Audrey Allen, Sara Bluhm, Hyunae Chang, John Pyne Overall. Adam Abramowitz, Jaclyn Kaplan, Bryna Kravitz, Joanna Leoni, Rob Lindeman, Jay Del Rosario, Jaime Schleske, Adviser: Mr. Belchikoff.
Reactions Of Compassion

Several activities not only benefit East students, but also serve the community. Adopt-a-Grandparent members visit a nursing home to spend time with senior citizens talking or playing games, brightening an elderly friend's day. Other activities are the Blood Drives. Chairperson Hyunae Chang ('96) says, "By (giving blood) in high school, it sets a pattern for people's lives." During the FOP party, students interact with handicapped children in the area. Party preparation includes making decorations and the student's greatest rewards are the kids' happy faces.

Members of the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program help new students adjust to East. Member Randi Greenberg ('97) said, "It makes new students feel welcome among their peers and in school altogether."

Finally, Respect for Drugs hopes to stop drug abuse early by visiting schools and talking to young students. Acting as role models, members give young students alternatives to drug abuse.

Thus, these clubs show their commitment to community improvement, proving East cares.

BIG BROTHER BIG SISTER CHAIRPEOPLE: Christine Allen, Nicole Cenquitella, Holly Galindo, Lauren Goldstein, Lauren Mehr, Sheryl Weinberg, Adviser: Mr. Belchikoff

FOP CHAIRPEOPLE: Christine Brusato, Nancy Chawla, Niti Dalal, Dipaadi Gosh, Amanda Hartung, Andrew Ittermann, David Kon, Andrea Kopperman, Kristin Mozillo, Harris Roth, Christina Rudi, Allison Singer. Adviser: Mr. Belchikoff
Give Them Something To Talk About

It's a battle of the minds, and only the most well-informed survive. Mock Trial and World Affairs are two activities in which students' put their debating and defending skills to the test.

This year in Mock Trial, members zealously played out an adoption/custody rights case. The plaintiff team, led by lawyers Orit Raevsky ('97) and Tammy Hepps ('96), confronted defense team attorneys, Jennifer Hepps ('98) and Ed DiMarzio ('96). Throughout the course of the season the lawyers learned to write direct and cross examinations, formulate openings and closings, and make objections.

World Affairs, a different type of public speaking activity, allows students to discuss such topics as the KKK, the Republican candidates, the Million Man March, and gun control. World Affairs gives students an open forum to debate current issues and hear various opinions. Jeff Barmach ('96) said, "World Affairs offers students the opportunity to voice their opinions on national and international issues and the responses can be judged or assessed by other students."

The serious discussions of both Mock Trial and World Affairs inform East students of current issues in the world around them.

Advisor: Mr. Nation

World Affairs Club: Anthony Martinez (President), Ed DiMarzio (Vice-President), Adam Abramowitz (Secretary/Treasurer), Peter Hong (Publicity Manager). Advisors: Mr. Simon, Julio Adulfo-Memish, Joan Bae, Daniel Baetz, Jeff Barmach, Pat Bogen, Sahid Bovin, Josh Buchman, James Buyn, Nancy Chauvaux, Christine Chen, Bruce Cheney, Mike Chit, Diana Chung, Kristian Dastmartz, Stephanie DeNes, Arianna DeNaples, Teddy DePrato, Sarn Daseil, Ed DiMarzio, Chien Freyman, Tom Gormoven, Hilary Gould, Pull Gulay, Krit Gual, Peter Honig, Andrew Islamman, Sima Kofkat, Lydia Kim, Monica Kim, Marc Konmer, Frederick Kun, Carrie Lee, Matt Lanza, Alicia Lee, Jennifer Lee, Brolke Lenman, Amy Lewis, Chris Li, Winnie Liang, Yenson Liao, Max Marikian, Anthony Martinez, Carla Masud, ChingMilki, Keith Oetting, Neil Palahniuk, Viviana Palomino, Vani Pands, Stew Peal, Orit Raevsky, Purna Reddy, Michael Rowland, Sam Rosser, Alex Savo, Noah Schwartz, Kyle Smith, Aron Soffer, Jason Stuart, Simon Sung, Eric Taey, Smita Varshe, Sanjeeta Varshe, Wynn Williams, Louis Yi.
During a pre-trial conference, mock trial lawyer Jennifer Hepps ('98) presents a document to Dan Halperin ('97), who is posing as a judge. Jeffrey Morrow ('99), an alternate witness, observes this standard mock trial procedure.

Mr. Simon, a History II teacher, advises Adam Abramowitz ('97) on the day's World Affairs topic, the Republican candidates. After this instruction, Abramowitz will present his position to the other members of the World Affairs Club.

Brett Coppol ('99) and Mike Maitland ('99), two dedicated Mock Trial alternates, read the New Jersey statutes on adoption in order to prepare for this year's custody case.
Building a convincing argument is a team effort. "In debate, everyone is involved from the top varsity speaker to the research assistants," said Ed DiMarzio ('96), captain of the team. This year's topic is the U.S. foreign policy toward China.

DEBATE TEAM: Ed DiMarzio (captain), Tammy Hopps (captain), Jaime Lustbader (captain), Mike Choi, Sameet Desai, Mike Feng, Atul Gulab, Jennifer Heppu, Fred Kuo, Annie Lai, Vince Liu, Sumei Niogi, Pallavi Ojha, Sam Ritterman, Deb Sarkar, Adam Shapiro, Santosh Vardhana. Advisor: Mr. Nation.

Andrew Brecker (97) and Arnold Luk (99) ponder over possible chess moves. Chess gives students the opportunity to exercise their mental prowess while providing enjoyment at the same time.

After a mentally exhausting day at school, many students take a cerebral vacation. However, for some students, after school is when the mental exercise begins. These students participate in clubs and teams like debate, chess, and computer. They spend hours after school stimulating their brains, pondering chess moves, debate strategies, or different computer languages.

The difficulty of mastering computer languages is part of what makes Computer Club challenging. The students practice writing programs and some compete with other schools in problem-solving contests. Helen Jen (96), a member of the Computer Club, said, "We can apply the basics we learn in class to the club, and go beyond what we thought we could do."

Like the Computer Club, the Debate Team is very challenging. It allows opportunities for students to state their views on important issues. Tammy Hepps (96), co-captain of the Debate Team, said, "Each debate is very intense . . . . it demands thinking and analyzing on the spot and requires a lot of extemporaneous speaking."

Chess Club provides rigorous mental activity as well as enjoyment for its members. Alex Savu (97) has a philosophical view of the game. "For most, chess is simply a game, a fun way to pass a rainy afternoon. For some, it's a competition, a time to prove oneself to his comrades. "For me, it's a form of artistic expression," said Savu.
In the beginning of December, science students start preparing for the New Jersey State Science League competitions, which take place in January, February, March, and April. East sends her most talented young biologists, chemists, and physicists to compete with schools at the regional level. The competition also takes place at the state level. Sam Desai (‘98), a member of the Chemistry I team, said, "Science League allows us to apply concepts we learn in class to a fiercely competitive environment." Preparation for the meets takes place after school, when advisors teach the teams topics not covered in class.
Members of Physics II league Dana Ahn (’96) and Kim Wormald (’96) set up a projectile machine used to launch an object. Physics League meetings often incorporate hands-on learning in preparation for their competitions.

PHYSICS II: Dana Ahn, Bobby Chang, Cindy Chen, Tammy Hepps, Catherine Kim, Jamie Rosenberg, Kim Wormald. Advisor: Mr. Berryman.

Concentrating intensely, Sameet Desai (’98) practices for one of the four Chemistry League competitions. Students must put in at least a few hours every day to compete with their peers from various high schools across South Jersey.

Mr. Gordon Hanson, in charge of video equipment for the Cherry Hill district, projects a Cable 18 taping featuring Amanda Hartung ('96) and Rebecca Rosner ('97).

Getting ready to read announcements of upcoming events, Andrew Gussman ('96) skims the form as another broadcaster signs off saying, "and here's Andrew."

The morning and afternoon announcements that Rob Linden ('96) leads over the intercom inform students about club meetings.
TOP 10 REASONS WHY THE MEDIA CLUBS ARE COOL

10. The Broadcasting Team can say anything they want on the morning and afternoon announcements because no one listens anyway.
9. The Video Crew attends every East event and tapes all the mortifying actions students make.
8. After joining they learned that “film strip” was not what they expected.
7. Members of the Video Crew can proudly walk around East and say they are members of the A/V department.
6. Cable 18 members get a chance to spend extra time with adviser Mr. Haines.
5. The Broadcasting Team gives nicknames to each other that no one understands.
4. The Video Crew can focus in with their cameras on the attractive members of the activities they are filming.
3. Cable 18 participants can say that they have a career in television.
2. They get to use great pick-up lines like “Would you like to see my projector?”
1. They are the only people who know how to work the VCRs in school.

The Morning Announcements have been an exciting and important part of my mornings.

In the crowded Cable 18 office among old videotapes and suit jackets, Gerald Levine ('99) takes a break from the actual taping to creating a foreground.
Helping The School Run Smoothly

Cherry Hill East operates rather efficiently for a school of over one-thousand students. Many tasks are readily accomplished because of student support. Guidance, grade-level, nurse, choral, biology, drama, library, and photo aides help East run smoothly.

Top Five Reasons to Become an Aide
5. As a guidance aide, you never have to wait for an appointment.
4. As a library aide, you'll never have to pay a fine.
3. As a grade-level aide, you can plague your friends with an endless stream of cut slips.
2. As a nurse's aide, you learn about all sorts of strange illnesses such as "test avoidance syndrome".
1. As an aide at Cherry Hill East, you can miss class for legitimate reasons.

LIBRARY AIDES: Oren Feinstein, Matthew Jay, Mark Pleinisky, Justin Zappan, Adviser: Mr. Miamidian.

NURSES AIDES: Jodi Brenner, Faisal Farhat.

BIOLOGY LAB AIDES: Jon Casto, Deena Bianco, Ben Evans, Felicia Ferri, Rachel Katz, Jon Light, Richard Lipsius, Joelyn Schaff, Ann Tsay, Advisers: Mr. Head, Mr. Keller, Ms. Robison, Mr. Vranich.

DRAMA AIDES: Matt Bellante, Brad Nation, Ross Paul, Adviser: Mr. Nation.
Spirit Goals Achievements

Imagine yourself an officer for East, juggling classes and running the school, organizing activities like Mr. East, Battle of the Bands, Spirit week, or the Variety Show. Combined with these responsibilities, the student body officers also have to serve and represent the community.

The class officers have a heavy responsibility, running their class, fundraisers, and individual grade events for spirit week. Jessica Tannenbaum (98), the president of the sophomore class said, “Being an officer requires a lot of work, but I believe the rewards are greater.”

The SGA reps inform their classmates on upcoming student activities. Sara Keillerman (99), a freshman rep said, “I try to get my friends and classmates to go to the activities. The events end up being a success.”

The SGA is a hardworking cooperation, trying to maintain unity at East.

SGA STUDENT BODY OFFICERS: Tony Zappasodi (Pres), Brian Chow (Vice Pres, Affairs), Adam Abramowitz (Vice Pres, Activities), Eric Stolkin (Sec/Treas), Jeff Simons (Publ. Mgr.).

Vice president of the senior class, Courtney Smith (96), informs homeroom representatives of upcoming events. The “reps” then pass news to their respective homerooms.

JUNIOR CLASS OFFICERS: Jay Del Rosario (Pres), Brian Rosenzweig (Vice Pres), Margarita Sarmiento (Sec/Treas), Frank Zmuda (Publ. Mgr.).

SENIOR CLASS OFFICERS: Jason Leifkowitz (Pres), Julie Greenberg (Vice Pres), Anna Henshenberg (Sec/Treas), Courtney Smith (Publ. Mgr.).
Eastside's art editor Bridget Hawkesley ('96) puts the finishing touches on her sketch for the next issue of the newspaper.

At each monthly Eastside meeting, staff writers engage in a mad rush to pick the best articles. Tina Kang ('97) peruses News Editor Valerie Shaw's ('96) assignment sheets.
Putting The Pen To Paper

The announcement above is not a call for English lab or history papers. It is, instead, a salute to students who enjoy writing and are talented and creative enough to excel at it.

Eastside, the school's award-winning newspaper, allows students to take advantage of the opportunity not only to portray news, but also to angle features and rundown sports articles. "Writing is about creativity despite the form in which it is expressed. If it conveys information, that's a benefit to the creative juices, not a deterrent," said Nancy Chawla ('96) co-editor-in-chief.

Other students however, who enjoy a more informal presentation of their writing skills choose to work for Demogorgon, the award winning literary magazine published at East. Here, with submissions not restricted on length or style, students find the means to publish short stories, poems, or plays of any genre. "Demo is a great club, because it gives students a chance to express themselves while learning about poetry and writing," said Jill Lovejoy ('96) editor.
Diversity is the name of the game at Cherry Hill East, whose staff and students are as varied as they come. Fortunately, East offers an array of activities that address the unique interests of teachers and students. Some of these groups include the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, the Computer Team, and the Classic Movies Club.

Members of Fellowship of Christian Athletes focus on bible study to learn more about Christianity. The group meets every morning to reflect on passages of scripture. "I enjoy attending these meetings because it's a refreshing start to each day," said member Shannon Agner ('97).

The Computer Team, another unique club at East, allows students to pursue their interest in computer programming. Competing with other schools in the district, members work on developing and using computer programs. After taking the class Computer Concepts, John Kim ('97) said that he joined the team to "hone" his computer skills.

Newly created as of last year, the Classic Movies Club gives movie buffs a chance to indulge their passions for the classics such as "Citizen Kane." The members meet about once a week to watch these movies which range from black-and-whites to more modern types.

The various clubs at East provide ample opportunity for students to pursue their special interests.
Members of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes Kim Loburger, Shannon Agner (’98), and Nancy Brill stop to chat in the cafeteria. According to Nancy Brill (’96), “FCA is fun but also inspirational. It’s a very welcoming environment and we find it a good way to start the day.”

Taking Care Of Business

Because one of the most important goals of high school is to prepare students for their futures, East offers several opportunities for career training. The Cosmetology Club allows students interested in the beauty industry to hone their skills in hair styling, manicuring, and make-up application. The members provide free salon services to any East student who drops by the Cosmo room in F-wing during a lunch or study hall period.

Marketing education students may join DECA (the Distributive Education Clubs of America), an organization that plans activities at the local, state, and national levels. Members design products and create advertising and retailing strategies for them. As in the real business world, competition is an integral part of the DECA program.

The Mentor Program matches seniors with mentors in their chosen field. Students spend one afternoon per week at their mentor's work place, observing his or her activities. This program helps students decide if a particular career is right for them. "I learned that the laboratory at West Jersey Hospital is not a place I would want to work," said Rachel Katz (96), a Mentor Program participant.

Melissa Howe (97) and Rachel Amann (97) practice hair styles on a mannequin. Because cosmetology is only offered at East, several students come from West to take the class.

Miles Fullard (96) chooses a between class snack from the assortment of candy that the school store offers. Matt Gelman (96) sells everything from sweatshirt to notebook paper.
Students Search For Individuality Within Various School Activities

All By Myself

In a school the size of East, getting lost in the crowd is not a difficult task. However throughout their years here students spend their time learning many subjects, choosing many activities, and taking an interest in many issues. As a result they become individuals.

"Though activities are generally group oriented, when I get home, I still have to do my homework and manage my time by myself," said Nancy King ('97). Individual effort certainly shows through each person's unique touch on their activities and East in general. Every face in the crowd proves to be an individual in the giant East jumble.

"Combining teamwork and individual determination is crucial to succeeding."

Cutting through a thick stack of paper, Kevin Natali ('97) creates seemingly identical blood drops. But actually each blood drop has a unique expression, demonstrating the individuality of every blood drive member.

Amnesty International's vice president Laura Gessman ('96) stands up alone to address fellow members. "Throughout my life human rights issues have been very important to me, I'll carry that away with me through college and the rest of my life," said Gessman.
David Feinsmith ('97) puts the finishing touches on his Tigger cartoon. The artists' special talents show through as they make decorations for the long awaited POP party.

Canvassing flyers throughout the school, Eva Wasserman ('97) helps ROTC with its publicity. The individual efforts of each person in the group make the club flourish as a whole.

"Physics labs reinforce the concepts necessary to provide practical applications in everyday life," said Bobby Chang ('96). Combining teamwork and individual determination is crucial to succeeding.

Cartisa Graham's ('97) friends show their affection by sending her a balloon-o-gram on her birthday. Students spotted walking around school with these clusters of balloons spend their day with high spirits, as they can finally stand apart from the crowd.

After practicing for his upcoming tournament, Chris Chan ('97) takes a break from editing his program. "Computer programming is a very individualized activity which relies on the skills of each member rather than the team," said Chan ('97).
Steve Varon ('96), Dan Halperin ('97), Jon Light ('96), Adam Weiner ('98), Seth Robbinowitz ('97), Adam Hornbeck ('98) and Ben Schwartz ('99) plead for forgiveness from their brother, Pat Kelly ('96).

During Calypso, Anne Cohen ('99) and Diane Lesser ('98) cha-cha to the Spanish rhythms.

Jonathan Ross ('96) grins at the conclusion of the show as he realizes that his dreams came true.

Shaking his maracas fervently, Steve Varon ('96) shows that he does not care that he is wearing ruffles.

GO, GO, GO, JOSEPH!

The fall show, Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, was an immediate success, although it had a shaky start. Originally intended for a tour of Hawaii, the extravaganza met much opposition from students who preferred dramas or comedies. However, led by Mr. Nation, Mrs. Wilson, and Norman Taylor, the show soon took flight.

With only four weeks of rehearsal, the cast began to worry about the quality of the upcoming performances. By opening night they had not even had a dress rehearsal. But, despite the odds, the talented cast gave a terrific performance. “There was a tremendous bundle of energy that no one expected,” said Beth Finch ('96) about the performances. The actors had the audience laughing and congo-ing in the aisles. Obviously, Joseph quickly became a hit with all the crowds.

The story line of Joseph involved the life of Jacob and his many sons. The brothers sell Joseph, Jacob’s favorite son, to an Ishmaelite as a slave. It is an inspiring tale about a dreamer who manages to exult himself and his family above the dregs of society. Pat Kelly ('96), who played Joseph, said, “It was an incredible experience.”

As part of the Ishmaelite caravan, Tuomo Aho ('97), juggles to entertain his fellow travelers.

Patrick Kelly ('96), playing Joseph of the Red cast, soaks up the spotlight and the applause during the final bow.

In The Spotlight

The students of East are most well acquainted with the extravagant mainstage productions; however there exist many more opportunities for acting experience. Along with the theatre classes taught by Mr. Weaver and Mr. Nation, students are offered the chance to participate in Lab Theatre.

Lab Theatre was created to give students a chance to have a more substantial role than they would receive in a mainstage production. The Lab Theatre show was directed by Mr. Weaver. This year he was given the chance to produce a student written show, "Don't Take Away the Sun", written by Beth Finch ('96) provided challenging characters. Amy Scura ('97) said, "For me it was a learning experience. It was the first show I made. Mr. Weaver taught me a lot."

Unlike Lab Theatre, which is an after school activity, Actor Studio II is a class. The students use class time to prepare for their performance. As a class, they evaluated and chose several One Act plays to perform. Two students were chosen by "Weav" to direct two of the shows. Each show featured various members of the class and represented several different genres. Mr. Weaver was especially pleased with this year's class because they worked well as a team.

ACTOR STUDIO II: Drew Breckner, Francesca Fassio, Cory Feinhals, Marie Howay, Patrick Kelly, Brooke Lerman, Leslie Miller, Taila Rubel, Risa Sang Unei, Amy Scura. Teacher: Mr. Thomas Weaver.
Arl Butler ('99), Jen Heppe ('98) and Lauren Slawsky ('98) stand among many people yet, they are separated by different problems. The play focused on the feeling of being alone in a crowd.

Adam Weiser ('98) reflects on his past wrongdoings. His character in "Don't Take Away the Sun" had raped a girl played by Courtney Rader ('98).

Fran Fasso ('96) seems a bit apprehensive about her upcoming performance of "To Burn a Witch." In green room the actors are given last minute instructions from the director.

Nearly falling off the ledge of a center city high rise, Drew Brecker ('97) panics, while Brooke Lerman ('97) tries to instruct him in the proper way to commit suicide.
Mime Company manager, Abbey Sendrow ('96) attempts to put on a pair of jeans that no longer fit. A four year member of the company, she directs many of the skits that are performed during stage shows.

Sketching a sailboat on her cheek, Michi Mooney ('96) prepares to perform. Putting on makeup properly is one of the most important aspects of pantomime.

People usually communicate by talking; however, people can also relay messages through movement. Both the Mime Company and Orchesis utilize the power of motion.

Dance is a universal language, because emotions transcend all language barriers. The members of Orchesis use the after-school rehearsals to perfect their movement. Beginner and advanced dancers alike benefit from the instruction of Mary Beth Quinlan. Their hard work culminates in the PAVAS show where they perform several pieces of various styles. They perform more for the love of dancing than for the audience. Micki Mooney, a member of Orchesis, says, "Dance is a great pastime because it allows you to express yourself without struggling with words."

Mime company also uses movement, because in this art form, speech is strictly forbidden. The mimers generally perform to young children, but they are also known to evoke a grin on an adult or two. All of the mimers enjoy their work, because although it can be very tiring, seeing a child laugh at the show is incredibly rewarding. Knowing that they made even one child's life a little brighter gives the Mime Company all the motivation they need.

Senior Orchesis members, Micki Mooney ('96), Deena Bianco ('96), and Leslie Miller ('96) perfect their arm movements. Grace is essential to execute this type of dance properly.

Mime Company members Steve Varon ('96), Dan Halperin ('97), Micki Mooney ('96), Adam Hornback ('98), Beckee Wadler ('96) and Seth Rabinsowitz ('97) take time out to pose for a picture. The mimers love any attention they can attract.

Joel Brandwine ('96) expertly prepares a sheet of plexiglass for use in a door on the set of Joseph and the Technicolored Dreamcoat.

The Big Bad Wolf (Jeff Tabnick '96) and a rag doll (Wendy Reisman '97) lounge in the stair well during East's Halloween Costume Ball.

Dan Halperin ('96) executes a much hated duty, washing out paintbrushes. Although some jobs are dubbed freshman jobs all stage crew members pitch in when there is work that needs to be done.
BEHIND THE SCENES

A little known world exists in the theater department. It exists behind the curtains and behind the finds. It is Stage Crew and Thespian Society. The audience may never realize that they are there, or how much work they do; however they put in a great effort to make each show more spectacular than the last.

The Stage Crew, led by “Weave”, designs and builds all of the scenery that appears on East’s stage. They spend nearly every day assembling bits and pieces of the set. The sound engineers and the lighting engineers also need to spend time making sure their equipment is functioning properly. Many people cannot comprehend how impressive CHHSE’s technical theater is compared to most high school’s, but those who do are proud.

Thespian Society, as well, contributes to the behind the scenes activities. The members are active in the organization of fund raising events. For the past four years, they have sponsored the annual Haunted House and Halloween Masquerade. This year the plan to hold a car wash also. The funds are used to help defer costs of trips and to help support the department.

Wednesday (Beth Finch, ’96) and Mr. Orange (T.R. Weaver, ’96) take a moment away from being cynical and bleeding to death, respectively, to pose for this evil looking picture.

Talia Rubel (’97) ponders over which picture she should put up in the showcase first. On average it takes more than twenty hours to complete a showcase.
Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Snow Pat Kelly ('96) and Risa Sang-Urai ('96) steal a kiss. Before marrying Enoch, Carrie and Julie were best friends, but lately the Snow family looks down on Julie and her daughter.

The daughter of Billy and Julie, Louise, played by Mary Jo Galati ('97) meets a carousel Barker, Ari Cohen ('99) in the "Pas Deux." In this balletic scene Louise has her heart broken in a situation much the same as her parent's.

Adam Weiner ('98) as Jigger threatens Jonathan Ross ('96), Billy. Billy becomes involved in a crime planned by Jigger because he is concerned about having money to support his family.

Many traditions, such as Senior Cut Day, have been established at East. One such tradition that normally would not come to mind is the annual spring show performed by the budding young actors, actresses, and musicians of East. This year, the musical “Carousel” was performed, a story set in a New England fishing community about a mean-spirited man named Billy Bigelow (played by Jonathan Ross ‘96) and Michael Benn (‘98) who marries a sweet woman, Julie Jordan (played by Jaime Cerota ‘96) and Lauren Luchtman (‘98).

As a poor man to begin with, Billy panics when he discovers Julie’s pregnancy. After a robbing attempt has failed to ease the monetary situation, Billy, feeling desperate and frustrated, commits suicide, leaving Julie alone in her pregnancy.

Years later in heaven, Billy is given a chance to see his daughter, now taunted by society about her disreputable father. Touched by the sight of his child, Billy gives some advice to the troubled Julie and changes her perspective of the world for the better.

As well as being a show with beautiful music and creative sets, “Carousel” also reached out to its audience. “It hits home for a lot of people as a great show for any audience,” said Leslie Miller (‘96).

Nettie, an elderly towns person played by Marie Howay (‘96), comforts Julie (Jamie Cerota ‘96) after Julie is left with nothing after Billy dies. Nettie tells Julie that she will never walk alone.

The female featured dancers pose in what they fondly call their “Scary Creepy carnival positions.” During Louise’s dreamlike encounter with the banker, the dancers recreate the carnival atmosphere, but in a more sinister tone.
Paula Park ('96) rehearses for her solo in PAVAS. Paula has been dancing for thirteen years and has performed with the Pennsylvania Ballet for seven years.

Practicing her acting, Liz Elias ('96) gazes into the distance. The final performance may be the most important, however the hours of rehearsal are what makes a show a success.

Jared Cowan ('98) one of many talented musicians at East, accompanied Erin and Debbie during the Broadway Musical section of PAVAS. Although they did not receive as much credit for their performances, the accompanists are as important as the singers in creating beautiful music.

Singing has always been a part of Pat Kelly's ('96) life. This year he performed a song from Pippin, in which he held the title role last summer. Although some people fear the spotlight Pat thrives in it.

Fran Fasso ('96) and Sharon Lee ('96) sang a moving piece from the popular Broadway musical Les Misérables. Both girls enjoyed singing for their peers.
Mr. Steele entertained the audience with original songs. Over the last four years he has gained the respect of all who have had the chance to listen to his music.

A Potpourri Of Art

If there were an official day at East, February 9's PAVAS would certainly fit the bill. PAVAS, Performing and Visual Arts Society, brings East an enjoyable day of artistic enrichment. Activities range from sampling different foods in the cooking room to watching East's talented actors, singers and dancers perform on stage. PAVAS also displays artwork such as pencil sketches, paintings, and photography.

To the delight of East students, PAVAS works behind the scenes to create a memorable day of art celebration. Nominated by various teachers, students receive the honor of being inducted into PAVAS. Sharon Lee ('96) a member of the society, sang a piece from Les Miserables with Fran Fasso ('96). “Performing in PAVAS was my first and last chance to sing in front of the school, so I took advantage of the opportunity,” said Lee.

Students enjoyed attending PAVAS activities, if for no other reason than missing class. However, on February 9th they received one of the most valuable types of education: education in the arts.

Risa Sangurai ('96) does PAVAS with a flash. She, along with Abbey Sedorow ('96) and Leslie Miller ('96), performed a musical number from the show Gypsies. All members of the theatre and music departments had the opportunity to audition for a time slot in one of the periods set aside for individual performances.

Phil Castagner (97), Brett Rappaport (97), Matt Soffer (98) and Peter Oh (96), tenors in East Singers, vocalize under the instruction of Mrs. Wilson.

Dave Arnold (97) sings the tenor part of Colors of the Wind in the Winter Concert.

Mary Jo Galati (97), Margarita Sarmiento (97), and Christa Carroll (97), soprano Ils in Chansons, concentrate on their performance of Cantate Domino by Giuseppe Pitoni.

Phil Castagner (97) translates "Dirait-On", a French poem, for the audience.

The Vocal Workshop sopranos sing a melancholy piece by Bela Bartok. The song tells the story of a Daughter sent to a bad husband, and forbidden to return home.
Deep In The Heart Of D-Wing

Each day hundreds of students meander down D-Wing, to the vocal room. There, Mrs. Wilson and Mr. Faux await their arrival. Soon after the bell rings, the sounds of beautiful music fill the air.

Vocal Workshop is a mixed choir open to all students. Each year the class expands drastically; this year Mrs. Wilson had to add an additional period to accommodate the masses of music lovers. Vocal Workshop teaches the basics of singing, sight-reading, rhythms, and vocal health.

Chansons, an all female choir provides an intermediate level of musicianship. The females audition the previous year. In Chansons, the students attempt to gain a greater understanding of music theory. The girls in Chansons form bonds unique to all female classes.

East Singers, the highest level class, is a mixed choir like vocal workshop. In recent years East Singers have successfully competed against the top choirs in the country. This year they had the opportunity to perform with the Haddonfield Oratorio Society and the Philadelphia Orchestra Brass.

East is fortunate to have such a fine group of vocal classes. The students gain valuable experience through the expert instruction of Mrs. Wilson and Mr. Faux. If they remain as dedicated as they are today East is promised a bright future for the choral music department.

Hitting The Right Note

When one thinks of music at East, the Belles, Madrigals, and Casual Harmony immediately come to mind. Although known collectively as the school’s extra-curricular choral groups, these ensembles are very distinct from one another. The Belles of East, for example, is an all-female group that sings while playing. Being a member requires special hand coordination, and all of the music performed is arranged by the group itself. "There’s a special purity and beauty that we Belles strive for in our performances," said Ellen Miller (’96). One can see this in the beauty of their dresses, songs, and even smiles.

Contrary to the Belles, the Madrigals is a mixed-voice ensemble that sings sonorous a cappella pieces from the Renaissance period. Jonathan Light (’96) said, "The more classical style of the music really distinguished the Madrigals from the other groups." Members of the Madrigals, romantically dressed in Renaissance costumes, are often deceiving in their merry gambols; they need strong concentration and musical talent to be able to sing the delicate but complex harmonies.

Finally, there is Casual Harmony. As indicated by its name, the group performs rather casually. The ensemble occasionally makes its entrance by running on stage dressed charmingly in dinner jackets with blue jeans. "We sort of represent the comic relief of the three groups," remarked Raymond Chang (’96). Aside from melting the hearts of the female crowd with tender lyrics from contemporary songs, these boys can also enchant off-stage with their incredible singing talent and their casual harmonies.

Paula Park (’96), Wendy Reisman (’97), Matt Soifer (’98), and Marie Hissey (’96) sing happily according to the spirit of the song while Jon Light (’96) keeps the beat.

Crooning in their a cappella ways, Tony Roman (’97) and Jon Light (’96) delight the audience with their smooth voices.

Cheryl Boby (’96) and Heather Anderson (’96) entertain the audience with the song "Stars" which was arranged by Heather.

Debbie Barr (’98), Amy Shavelson (’96), Courtney Rader (’98), and Sharon Lee (’96) keep the music flowing with their voices and accompaniments.
Tony Romen ('97), Mike Benn ('98), and Dan Maloney ('96) continue the excellence of the vocal department by each making All-State Chorus. Each year East sends at least ten representatives to the All-State Chorus.

To get accepted by the South Jersey Wind Ensemble, Meson Banas ('98) spends countless hours perfecting his solo piece for the audition. Students often spend their time from mid-afternoon until midnight waiting to audition.

Orchestra Concertmaster, Raymond Chang ('96), Jennifer Lee ('96), Monica Kim ('96), and Sam Kuo ('96) end on a high note to their presentation on PAVAS day. The selection, "Polovetsian Dances," from Borodin's wild Russian Overture, "Prince Igor," is performed by the orchestra and choir.

Nancy King ('97), one of the violins that made All-South Jersey Orchestra, is seen performing at the concert in Rowan. The students in the South Jersey Orchestra spend three days from nine to five rehearsing for the concert.

Tough Act To Follow

Classical music boring? Not to the members of the East orchestra. They have their own opinions about classical music. Some like the comforting qualities of it. Kathy Tan (99) said, "When you listen to classical music, it makes you think of a story," Betsy Nees (97) feels more than that. "It relieves stress for me because I love trying to figure out what comes next and then being surprised," she said.

Playing classical music is also enjoyed by many at East. Jen Chang (97) said, "The East orchestra is one of the best high school orchestras in the country. It's fun playing with such talented people."

The various personalities of the students and the conductor Mr. Yurko's own flair help make the class unusually interesting. "Though orchestra seems like a boring class, we always have a lot of laughs," said Jason Tsai (97). Raymond Chang (96) said, "Mr. Yurko is a very energetic conductor, and often knocks over various stands." However, most people remember best Mr. Yurko's singing. Ken Shih (97) said, "I remember when Mr. Yurko decided to demonstrate for the choir how he thought "Polovetsian Dances" should be sung. He sang "Da-da-DEEE, doo doo dadada dum dum dee-dee-dee," while the orchestra went "Bum bum-bum bum-bum bum-bum, and the choir twittered." Benny Kim (98) added, "The comical effect of Mr. Yurko's musical rendition of Polovetsian Dances inspired me to aspire to new heights of musical accomplishment and potpourri."

Ellen Hur (97) summed it up: "Classical music is great. Besides, our ears need an occasional break from all those electric guitars and drums and all that other heavy load stuff."

Kathy Tan (99), Ross Wu (99), Toby Lightman (96), and Ruby Chang (98), intent on their music, make up a vital part of the first violins. The first violin section usually plays the melody.

Take It To The Limit

The equivalent to things like science league, math league, and debate for musicians are the various bands and quartets that live in D-wing. After school, students stroll into the band room for Lab Band or Jazz Ensemble. These group practices are almost like another school period, but the hard work is seen when performance time comes. Eric Tsay ('98) said, "We work hard in Jazz Ensemble, but we also have fun!"

Along with Lab Band and Jazz Ensemble, there are groups from the strings, winds, and brass sections. Two String Quartets are formed from the top strings in the orchestra. Sumit Niogi ('98) said, "The quartets are a good way of showing off our talents." Wind Quartet and Brass Ensemble practice during free time and after school. People who join these groups have a love for the music and their dedication to it is unfathomable. The people who join all these different groups should be considered the best of the best.

Members of the Jazz Ensemble play it cool under the direction of Mr. Roy Hough. The group rehearses after school on Mondays, practicing pieces like "Vehicle."

At a lab band concert, Nicholas Cardillo ('96) bows away at his bass, serious about making the group a hit. The Lab Band experiments with different types of music to reach out to a wider audience.

Concentrating on his performance, Jonathan Li ('98) plays his saxophone with the Jazz Band. This group of talented musicians enjoy playing entertaining music.

As members of the Chamber Winds, John Kim ('97) and Ann Tsay ('97) run over their parts, making sure that the quintet sounds sweet. The Chamber Winds practice for their final performance in the spring.

Heather Anderson ('96) rehearses with the Chamber Winds in preparation for a performance. The group comprises the principal chairs players of the woodwind section of the Wind Ensemble and Mr. Yurko on the French Horn.

Taking deep breaths, Kevin Alenskas ('98) and Dan DiFlavio ('98) get ready to blast the sound out of their trumpets at the Brass Ensemble concert. The Brass Ensemble is a small group of dedicated players that give up their after-school hours for music with the group.

Playing Up A Storm

The lights are on and the crowd is waiting. The bands begin to perform in front of a crowd of attentive ears. First there is the young but gifted Freshman Wind Ensemble. The Symphonic Band comes next with their growing talent. Then the Wind Ensemble performs with prestige and finesse. These bands have practiced every day for these two big nights: the Spring Concert and the Winter Concert.

They walk on to the stage with faces of concentration and determination. Their nerves do not crack under the glaring lights. "I feel pressure, but I try to relax," said Ann Tsay ('97). They begin to play filling the whole auditorium with beautiful music that flows through the room pleasing anyone who listens to them.

Little boys and girls, who thought that their instruments were toys, grow up and blossom into fine musicians. They wait for the day that they can show off their talents. They have practiced hard enough and spent their time working and never giving up their dreams of performing. Meson Banas ('98) said, "Practice makes perfect and I have practiced ever since I was in 4th grade." Their dream has come true as they play the last note of an almost perfect concert.

Ringing the chimes, Charles Pusioski ('97) adds the special effects needed in the piece.

Marc Bell ('97) plays his saxophone during the symphonic Band's performance of "Celebration" by James Curnow. He adds the pep into the piece.

The Freshman Wind Ensemble concentrate on Mr. Hough to guide them through “Tower Bridge March” by Robert Washburn. The group allows freshmen to gain more experience before moving up.

Keeping the air going, Cheryl Bohl (’96), Colleen Klaasen (’96), and Jennifer Magee (’96) keep the music flowing. They provide much of the melody in the Wind Ensemble.

Dave Arnold (’97) is an essential part that keeps a steady beat for the Wind Ensemble. This beat is often used in marches.
And The Band Played On

There is a being that accompanies the Cherry Hill East football team that supports it whenever it plays at a game. This being is the marching band, an ensemble that plays at East’s football games to keep the crowd rowdy and to root for the cougars. They can usually be found in the stands before the game, playing music to support East’s team. At half time, the band performs a field show where flag and rifle routines, as well as choreographed cheers from the Cougarettes, accompany energetic music.

Aside from football games, the marching band also plays at East’s annual pep rally and occasionally competes with marching bands from other schools. They compete in the Wildwood Parade and this year performed several songs at the Collingswood Parade.

Although serious in competition, East’s marching band follows an unusual tradition. Every year, at the homecoming game, a stuffed cougar is tossed high up into the crowd - with a crumpled West T-shirt sewed in its mouth. The tradition is usually accompanied by quirky cheers as well as cadences composed by the band itself, such as the one called “Yah-hah”, in which the band stops to play any random notes it wants.

Despite its strange habits, however, the marching band shows a great deal of dedication in its work. Heather Anderson (’96) said, “Being in the marching band helps in giving you a lot of school spirit. It’s a great experience for everyone in the group.”

An aerial view of the marching band displays the precision with which its members operate.

Jessica Fensch (’96), assistant drum major, plays the saxophone when she is not conducting.

Burke Glover (’96) blows his tuba to the beat of Dave Arnold’s drum.

Captain Eric Nathanson (’96) dances to the music of the band.
Adam Fensch (Beck Middle School), Kevin Akinskas ('98), Dan Diffinis ('98), Phil Hausler ('99), and Jon Hall ('97) perform during the homecoming game.

INDIVIDUALS
Friends Are Friends Forever

The transition from the middle school world to the high school world topples freshmen off their eighth grade pedestals, pushing them head first into their lowly "frosh" status. Among the many adjustments that they must make, to them the most important is with friendships. Amanda Wild ('99) said, "Some of my friends and I have grown apart, unfortunately. But overall, I've made many wonderful friends so far."

One of the reasons why freshmen quickly make so many new friends stems from the interesting array of activities at East. "When Mr. Belchikof said that East is a buffet, I didn't really believe him. But now I'm having a blast on the all-you-can-eat meal plan!" exclaimed Deborah Ahn ('99). Richard Chu ('99) explained, "Ever since I came to East, I've made many new and different friends from my activities here."

Perhaps the most important aspect of freshman year, though often overlooked by the freshmen themselves, is its effect in laying the foundation for a successful high school career. Ellen Hur ('97) said, "Although I didn't know it then, my teachers freshman year really helped me prepare for my more difficult classes to come."

"So far I'm having a good high school career," summed up Haines Ahn ('99), echoing the sentiments of most East freshmen. Despite the sometimes scary changes, they are on their way!

Lounging around in the cafeteria after school helps students unwind and relax. Debbie Ahn ('99), Ted DePrince ('98), and Leslie Moser who ('99) take advantage of this time, discussing the latest gossip and the events of the day.

Elaine Fan ('99) pays close attention in Dr. Kim's QPS class. Kim's lecture on the neutralization of acids and bases is the foundation for the lab the students will be completing on Acid-Base Filtration.
Social Studies to World Civilizations — another transition all freshmen must go through as they enter the world of high school. No one can forget the brain-numbing social studies in eighth grade. But, is World Civ. much different?

“It’s a big change from last year because we absorb more material,” Rosa Wu (‘99) answered. Others disagree — “World Civ. is not much different from S.S. even though it follows a different format,” said Jeff Su (‘99).

For many students, World Civ. is a class in which they can learn more about other cultures, worlds, and people. “It’s more interesting because it talks about different cultures and religions more than we did last year,” said Courtney Regis (‘99) while Jane Kim (‘99) said, “I don’t like World Civ. because we don’t focus on current events which really relate to the world we live in.”

In retrospect, many seniors appreciate the broad coverage of material in World Civ. “My class was not only relaxing and fun — it was also a learning experience,” said Monica Kim (‘96).

Whether you loved or hated World Civ., the fact remains — it was our first real taste of academics at CHHSE.

Yin Yang For Freshman

As the class of '99 finally hands down the title of freshmen class, their thoughts turn to expectations of the years ahead. Now that they know the ropes a little better, they can start to look ahead to new activities, friends, and classes.

So what is it exactly that they would like to accomplish academically, socially, and activity-wise? Now that they are familiar with the happenings at East, the ex-freshman can get more involved in a variety of activities. Tricia Kang ('99) said, "I think in the next three years I would like to work hard academically, but at the same time be able to do activities and hang out with my friends." Creating a balance between academics and activities becomes a challenge for many non-freshman students who are looking to take advantage of East's "buffet".

Along with the expectations that the ex-freshman have of East, they also feel East's expectations upon them. Jeffery Su ('99) says, "I feel like I'll have to start working harder in school because that's when your grades really count." They can no longer use the old excuse, "Oh, I'm only a freshman," but have to start taking responsibilities for their future East careers.

Some members of the Class of '99, however, will miss some aspects of freshman year.

Wynn Williamson ('99) and Dustin Tabnick ('99) learn how to use Microsoft Excel in STAR, Dr. Kim's idea for preparing freshmen for the future.
Carefully aligning the framework of her kite, Betsy Watts ('99) demonstrates how important precision is in the construction of 3-D Art projects. Her careful work will help her kite fly high above the rest.

Marisa Levin ('99) and Nikki Freedman ('99) paint Rabbit and Eeyore for the FOP party. Winnie the Pooh decorations are favorites of many of the children who attended the FOP party.

Sharon Hwang ('99) outlines a drawing of Simba from The Lion King. The popular Disney character is bound to be appreciated by the children at the annual F.O.P. Holiday Party.

The Burden Of Science

Which one will happen first to students: a nervous breakdown or a spontaneous combustion? Usually a near nervous breakdown occurs because Sophomore year is a totally different experience from Freshmen year. With the options of honors classes, classes become more challenging.

The science labs make the difference between the years. "The science lab in sophomore year is a big jump from Freshmen year," said Karl Sukhia ('98).

Even though the sciences require much studying, people enjoy the science labs. Erika Ferrentino ('98) said, "In chemistry, I like to make things go boom and I hope it burns the school down."

Some other students have a lab out of lunch. "I am usually dying after the two lab sciences, I have out of lunch," said John Chung ('98). To make up for the lost meals, students try to eat between the periods when they have lab.

The stress level during sophomore year is higher because people compete with each other for class rank because science labs cost more points in class rank then regular classes.

Pratima Vardhana ('98) said, "I can never find the time for work with my double science labs. I feel like I am a chicken without a head."

Even though the science labs sound like they are a pain in the neck, think of all the fun things to do like dissecting fetal pigs and frogs.
Stress Level: Critical

Monica D'Antonio ('98), Nicole Bidne ('98) and Marvin Alexander ('98) share a favorite excerpt from an English literature book. Many students find that studying in groups is more effective than studying alone.

Frazzled by a difficult homework assignment, Thit Young ('98) ponders over a math problem. In contrast to the carefree freshman year, sophomores start to feel more pressure.

Is Driver's Ed Worth It?

Driver's Ed., a requirement for all sophomores at East, exposes the students to the privileges of driving as well as the consequences of poor driving. The class enlivens the straightforward manual with videos and teacher presentations. Melissa Anderson ('98) said, “Driver's Ed. taught me a lot and I feel ready to go out on the road now.”

Taking Driver's Ed in school is also financially advantageous because insurance companies often give a discount for completing the course.

Even with the advantages of taking Driver's Ed., some students are still dissatisfied. Although she likes the course, Diana Lesser wishes that Driver's Ed. allowed for hands-on experience dealing with cars. On the other hand, Travis Lexton ('98) said, “I'd rather be spending my gym period doing physical activities.”

Through any complaints, Driver's Ed., whether convenient or bothersome, is essential for every student who hopes to drive.

Group learning makes its way into the classroom as an effective method of instruction. Scott Mooney (’98) and Michelle Rosenberg (’98) react to a passage from their history text. Group learning encourages students to share their ideas and consider opposing points of view.

Trekking through the halls of East is sometimes easier with a friend. Cynthia Pidcock (’98) and Laura Tirone (’98) are glad to find each other in the giant East jumble.
Painting Techniques, the introductory painting class at East, teaches students how to work with a variety of mediums. Decon Segel (98) and Jignasa Guaner (98) experiment with a combination of crayon and watercolors.

Faby Disarzo (98) carefully measures 50 milliliters of water for her Diffusion through a Cell Membrane lab. Many of the labs in Biology I-H involve setting up theoretical conditions to help explain what actually happens to a cell.

Flipping through a magazine, Alicia Lee (98) looks for ideas for her painting project. In Miss Sacca’s painting techniques class, students find inspiration beyond the normal realm of the classroom.

Expecting a break after sophomore year? Forget it! "Junior year is a nightmare. The stress building up from activities, schoolwork and parents seems more than anyone, much less a highschooler, should, or can, bear," said Nancy King ('97). For everyone, junior year is the year to slave. The fact that colleges focus on junior year brings college planning ominously close.

Between juggling activities and schoolwork and worrying about standardized tests (i.e., SATs and Achievements) many juniors begin to feel that twenty-four hours in a day are not enough. Carla Mavrodin ('97), echoing the sentiments of many laments, "There just isn't enough time for everything I need to do." Zahid Biviji ('97), however, sums it all up in two words, "It's tough."
“Puh-Sat”-Betsy Nees (’97)

For most, Junior year is filled with the most stressful decisions. They frantically study for their College Board examinations and try to decide which colleges they want to apply to. But, it is not to say that they have not found a way to shorten their dealings with the Scholastic Aptitude Test 1, the Scholastic Aptitude Test II, or with the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Tests.

How exactly do they shorten their dealings with these Tests? Well, by telling it like it is: SAT I, SAT and PSAT. Or is it sat, say-tee, say-ti, psats, or satee? Zahid Bivivi (’97) has his own way of saying it. He said, "P-S-A-T" is to long to say, so I shorten it by saying "P-sats." The length of the test names are a main reason for the shortening of the names to phonetic pronunciations. The shortening of the test names are also a colloquial way for students to describe them to each other. Betsy Nes (’97) said, "I say 'p.uhsat' to my friends and 'P-S-A-T' to those who don't know what it is." This secret language is inherited by each of the upcoming junior classes and is used profusely.

On the other hand, some do not even need to shorten these names. Ellen Hur (’97), for example, says, "I don't talk about the SAT's enough to have to shorten it to make it easier, I just say the abbreviations how they’re supposed to be said." Brian Chow (’97), although with another point of view, agrees, saying, "I try not to say 'SAT I', or 'SAT II' or 'PSAT' because I'd rather not think about them." Either way, the time comes when juniors must stand in the face of these tests and pass this secret language down to the upcoming sophomore class.
This Is The Beginning Of A Beautiful Friendship.

The importance of junior year to many colleges changes the attitudes of many students who had previously considered grades as a second priority. The desire to do well causes some students to concentrate more in class, which leads to improved student-teacher relationships. Students also realize that they will need teachers to write recommendations during senior year. Since teachers get to know a student's goals and personality while writing a recommendation, teachers come to advise students about their college and career plans. "As students get older, they become more mature and reach an understanding with their mentors that they didn't have before," said Mike Choi ('97). Along with this deeper understanding, however, comes a need for greater independence. Vincent Liu ('97) said, "Teachers, along with parents, are the last obstacle to our independence. As we grow, they cease to be the saints of our childhood and become more and more equal to us." Junior year is just another step in the process of growing up.

Many of the teachers at East make themselves available for morning and afternoon extra help. Mr. Opree assists Brian Loew ('97) with his math homework, by showing one way to solve the math problems.

Shayna Sellers (’97) raises her hand to answer a question in Algebra class. Most students find that participating in class helps them understand concepts better.

Painting guards for the front of the Junior Float, Maria Barhleen (’97), Ellen Horr (’97), and Leslie Wagner (’97) put the finishing touches on their work. “Spirit Week was a great way for me to support my class. I had a lot of fun being involved,” said Wagner.

Jaime Kasselman (’97) and Steve Hilbert (’97) take a moment to relax and pose for the camera before the end of class. Although the day’s lesson plan can be long, having friends in class always makes it seem a little bit more interesting.
To The Class Of '96:

We would like to thank you for allowing us to represent you during our senior year. We hope that we did our best for you. We won Spirit Week, and our prom was truly incredible. Without your support we would never have gotten the job done.

Now, our time at East is through, and we are graduating. Some of us will move on out into the world, while others are looking forward to the next graduation ... 2000! Hopefully, none of us will be "living in a van down by the river." Now, we would like to leave with you with some advice:

1. Never bet on a three-legged horse.
2. Beware of the naked man who offers you the shirt off his back.
3. You can pick your friends, and you can pick your nose, but you can't pick your friends' noses.
4. Don't feed the bears.

Good luck!
Love,
Your class officers
Courtney, Jason, Anna, and Julie
Freshman Year

September 2, 1992. 7:00 AM. We were all wide awake, dressed in our coolest “high school clothes,” nervously preparing to leave our cozy, comfortable homes for the rough and tough world of Cherry Hill East. On this morning of the first day of our freshman year, our stomachs churned as we carefully checked and rechecked our appearances. Fluorescent tie dye? No, way too junior high!

And then - just as we were beginning to think that we were ready, that we could handle the day’s burden - a message flashed on Cable 18. Four hundred phones rang instantaneously. A teacher’s strike?!!?!? No school for at least another week?!?!? One week later, once again, we repeated the whole process. This really was it - our first day of high school. And man, were we ever ready. We were not going to be labeled as typical freshmen.

We persevered through all of the typical freshman traumas - perpetually jammed lockers, elevator and pool passes, lateness, teachers, and rude upperclassmen. But what we really remember are not those humiliating moments (tripping on the stairs, getting crushed in the lunch line, etc.), but the activities.

Yeah, we all heard the line “East is a buffet” a thousand times during freshman orientation - from Mr. Belchikof, from upperclassmen begging us to join their clubs, from our parents begging us to start compiling good activities for college (which, incidentally, was the furthest thing from our minds). But how true it was. We quickly got involved in everything - you name it, we let our presence be known there.

After electing our first set of class officers (and getting stuck in the voting booths), we quickly showed our school spirit during Spirit Week. We had an incredible time putting together our Lollipop Game booth, assembling our “Spring” float which melted in the rain, and participating in tug-of-war, the jump rope contest, and all of those cool lunch games. We came in last place, but it was OK; we were just freshmen. We had a lot to learn.

Meanwhile, we were awe struck by Godspell, Into the Woods, the Variety Show, the Lip Sync Contest, Battle of the Bands, and Mr. East. Junior High never provided so many fun activities and dances for us- all we had was eighth grade semi. But the best dance of all, of course, was our gala Freshman Dance. And we really made it a gala. Girls got their hair and nails done, while guys shelled out the big bucks for lavish corsages. So what if it was only in the sparsely decorated cafeteria? We made it as prom-like as we could.

By the end of the year, our freshman fears had dissipated. No longer were we paranoid post-eighth graders with inferiority complexes. We were on our way!

Sophomore Year

Sophomore year was the year that the State of New Jersey blindly gave us permission to get behind the wheel of a car and terrorize the highways. Well, OK, with Mom or Dad screaming in the passenger seat. It all started with Driver’s Ed, in which we learned that it’s bad to crash into other cars (really?) and cool to wear 70’s duds like those studs in the videos. Unfortunately, we did have to spend six hours behind the wheel of a 1970 jalopy with a smelly old man to actually get the permit. But who cared? We finally had freedom to cruise the highways. Well . . .

Parent: You’re going too fast! We’re all going to die!

Kid: I’m only going 20 miles per hour!

Meanwhile, back at East, we were finding our course load much more demanding than freshman year. Whether we took honors, accelerated, regular, or modified classes, we quickly found that we actually had to work! And work hard, too! Yet we took time out to cheer on the Phillies in the World Series, of course.

Despite the increased stress, we managed to have fun, once again, in Spirit Week, with the theme of “Rocky.” This year our float survived the weather (though it still came in last), and we again wowed the school with our booth featuring … surprise-the Lollipop Game. We came in last place again. Nevertheless, we enjoyed ourselves at performances of The Diary of Anne Frank and Sweeney Todd.

In January we missed around two weeks of school for the famous and wonderful Blizzard of ’94. Then in February, we had an amazing time at Club '96, our sophomore cotillion - or "co-tillion," as our souvenir key chains read. We received our class rings and obsessed over getting them turned 96 times. (At least we're the Class of '00 in college!)

By the end of our sophomore year, we really had established our legacy at East. We stood out in the music department, the drama department, on the sports teams, and in every club, obtaining leadership positions and excelling in all that we did. And, luckily, we were through with being underclassmen.

Junior Year

As we planned our junior year schedules the previous spring with our guidance counselors, we finally realized that we'd have to really have to buckle down if we ever wanted to get into ... college. Yes college, that dreaded entity that we "didn't have to worry about yet." It finally dawned on us that it was time to start thinking about our future. The year was an alphabet of madness - PSAT's, SAT's, SAT II's, NMSQT, HSPT's, ETS, CSS, FAFSA, GPA, AP's, etc. But, on a lighter note, we did FINALLY get our driver licenses (some of us after trying several times). Now if only we didn't look so heinous in our pictures.

And finally, we really and truly ran the school. We had the leads in Noises Off and The Wizard of Oz, which was so successful that every performance was sold out. We led the clubs, the teams, the SGA, the school, the world! Yes, we truly had the typical upperclassmen superiority complex. It was our turn to boss everyone around. After all, we were the big, bad juniors. In Spirit Week, with the theme "The Jetsons," we finally stopped coming in last and started winning. (However, we did lose Powder Puff.)

Our Junior Prom at the Venice Plaza was the dance that we had been eagerly awaiting. As we danced to our prom song, "All I Want Is You,” we realized that our time at East was drawing to a close. Some of us went off during the summer to represent East at the Governor’s Schools, Boys and Girls State, and the other leadership conferences. All of us prepared for our last year at East.

Senior Year

Senior year began stressfully, and then only got worse. OJ Simpson’s trial provided only a slight diversion. As we cried and pulled out our hair while filling out college application after college application, financial aid form after financial aid form, all eyes were on the magical day that ended the first semester.

But things weren’t so bad, after all. Colleges were actually very impressed with us and recruited us heavily. We earned accolades for our twelve National Merit Semi-Finalists and our 45 Hall of Fame Members. And teachers and our fellow students really admired us.

We enjoyed two senior cut days (one of which fell on the same day as a huge snow storm), coming in to school from I-HOP around 10:00, cutting classes “to go to guidance,” leaving school early, and not going to school “to visit colleges.” Conveniently for us, a Barnes and Noble opened up during our senior year to provide a much needed haven to get away for awhile from our hectic schedules. And who will forget the days off due to “The Storm of the Century?” But, when the end of first semester came, that was it. We cut loose. Senioritis had officially set in and the grades we had worked so hard to maintain first semester quickly slid downhill.

Nevertheless, despite our waning (or nonexistent) attention spans, we still managed to fulfill our leadership positions. Of course we won Spirit Week with the theme “Honolulu” - was there ever a doubt? And although we lost Powder Puff to the juniors, we played a tough game. We shone in Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat and Carousel, played excellently on the sports fields, performed marvelously on the academic teams, and basically wowed everyone in whatever we did. We had an amazing time in Disney World. And we wowed ourselves in April when we found out that we had actually been accepted to college.

Our last big dance, the Senior Prom, was truly a bittersweet affair. Dressed up one last time with a special date, we enjoyed our last high school dance with people we had known since elementary school. But it was Graduation Day that sealed our fate. Our time at East had ended. As we marched in red or white caps and gowns to Pomp and Circumstance and received our diplomas to the cheers of our families, we could not help but be proud. After a false start, we really did have a successful high school career. As we parted the night away at Cherry Hill Racquet Club during Project Graduation, in the back of our minds we wondered - would we ever be together again like this?

No matter where we go next year, our four years at East will always remain the foundation upon which we will build our lives. Our friendships, our good times and bad, the lessons we learned, and all of the memories will remain impressed deep in our minds and our hearts. High school may have been miserable at times, but overall, it has made us into the young men and women that we are now, stepping out to impress the world.

Seated behind luxurious desks stacked with papers and more than a few disciplinary reports are the people we perceive to be our high hands of administration. As we run late to class, dawdle in the hallways, or finish off some last minute assignments, principals are usually not the focus of student life. They seem almost hidden away in a remote hallway where we only visit them to visit trouble.

“Academics must always come first and foremost, but the overall responsibility of a principal is to provide an environment for learning. That environment must go beyond the classroom to be an important part of student life and faculty life,” said Principal James Gallagher.

Although we try to avoid them at all costs, forging notes for early dismissal & begging the teachers not to write us up, we still realize that the same principals that discipline us are also involved in our lives as we undertake the role of students. Although they may represent the men in suits, their interaction is often more personal than we would like to admit.

Mr. Leonard Terranova said, “Most of what I do involves helping kids obey the rules. That gives me a hard time when it comes down to getting to know the average student. It doesn’t mean that I am simply a mindless administrator. It means that I work twice as hard, making the special effort to participate.”

For those of us that have made that fateful trip to the office and for those of us that have survived the trip, we have tried to keep our distance to a minimum and our involvement to an even more rare occurrence. We have taken less time, perhaps than they have in molding not only the academic face of East but also its image of open education.

Members of the Cum Laude Society are the greatest minds that East, a school known for its academic excellence, has to offer. Following a ninety year tradition, the top 15% of the senior class enjoys the honor and recognition of being inducted. Some of the annual activities sponsored by the organization are free tutoring for students as well as a holiday drive to benefit area shelters.

As students continue the traditions of Cum Laude, this year’s members paved the way for a new tradition in the East Cum Laude Society - an annual Trivia Bowl. With the help of advisor Mr. Schnell, President Jennifer Lee, Vice President Alia Brukman, and Secretary-Treasurer Samuel Kuo organized a question-answer contest after school. As Jen Lee read the questions, teams of three Cum Laude members racked their large minds for seemingly useless bits of information from subjects ranging from physics to Greek mythology. Everyone who participated in the Bowl had a wonderful time.

Members of the Cherry Hill East Cum Laude society put their minds together to celebrate a general tradition at East: a love of learning.

East created life-long friendships for the class of 1996 during their four years here.
Shane Ford, Amy Cole, and Catherine Montano, through their classes together and after school activities, have formed the unbreakable bonds of true friendship.

Drilling a screw into the suspensions of his bridge, Jeffrey Barron, a senior, works with a steady hand. Concentration and skill are two of the most important abilities for students in woodshop.
As we leave Cherry Hill East, let’s remember some important lessons which we have learned during our time here, lessons not taught by any old teacher, but gained from experience.

1. Whoever said an apple a day keeps the doctor away never ate in the cafeteria.

2. Early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise. But most of us would trade it all for a good episode of ER.

3. The early bird catches the worm, but wouldn’t you rather a cut slip so you can get out of class to have it signed?

4. If at first you don’t succeed, try, try again. This however, does not apply to tests. If you fail once, that’s all folks!

5. If you can’t say something nice, don’t say anything at all. Your teachers tend to be standing right behind you when you talk about them.

6. When you look at the world through rose colored glasses . . . . . . Oh, never mind. That’s just the smoke from your cigarette.

7. A rolling stone gathers no moss, and in the case of most students it doesn’t get much sleep either.

8. When it comes to parties, there is more than one fish in the sea; so, try to catch them all.

9. A bird in the hand is better than two in the bush . . . . prom dates, need we say more?

At this point, your attention is probably dwindling, so here’s a final thought: The grass is always greener on the other side, but once we’re there, will East actually look any better?

Paula Park ponders over the intricacies of East life . . . or maybe she’s trying to just look clever?!

Do you know any of these people? Look carefully - do you recognize any of those faces ... or those tacky clothes?! Does this picture bring back joyful memories of your elementary school days - finger-painting in art, newcomb in gym, and most of all ... RECESS! Whether it was the mad race to the swings, hanging upside down on the monkeybars, or playing kickball, recess was the central part of the day for everyone.

Some less appealing aspects of grade school were the music lessons with mad music teachers banging discordant chords on the piano and the aides who always managed to blow the whistle in your ear.

Nevertheless, grade school was the age of joy and happiness. One's high school years may be the most memorable, but one's grade school years represent the high point of one's education when learning was really and truly fun.

... And After

Now do they look familiar? Those small children are your own classmates. Who would've guessed that under the bright red hair of the girl in the second row would be the mind of one of East's best students? Matt Selverman, now one of the star players of our football team, has definitely grown some muscles since his grade school days. And look at Orin Belinsky's change in clothing from ultimate tacky to ultimate cool in shades. Other people, however, haven't changed much.

Hyunae Chang and Liz Elbas are still recognizable despite the changing years. Others have changed so much one wonders if they're still the same people. Is that Howard Yeh in the corner? Obviously, the years between grade school and high school have changed some students drastically, while others changed little. Who knows? Maybe 20 years in the future, we may be looking through our high school yearbooks and marveling at the changes, just as we marvel at this change from childhood to adolescence.

School day numbers 84 and 96. A.K.A. “Senior Cut Day.” Cherry Hill East has long held the tradition in which the graduating class takes a day off from school so that they may enjoy extra sleep, parties, and fun.

“I believe it is a great reward for three-and-a-half years of hard work,” says Gregg Goldmenger. Maybe he’s right. After all, a day off could be just what the seniors deserve, since their high school career is nearly over.

But what does one do on Senior Cut Day? Some go bowling or go to movies; some have parties; others just relax, sleep late, but all have fun. “Senior Cut Day” is like an official day off, except that everyone else is in school. It’s a day which all students look forward to. It is one of those rewards that the graduating class enjoys.

On Senior Cut Day, seniors Josh Hundert, Ann Henzenberg, Austin Wang, and Christine Bassi hanged out at a friend’s house, enjoying the time off from school. However, the thought of returning to school the next day lingers in their minds.
IN A CLASS OF THEIR OWN

Besides privileges like laughing at freshmen and owning parking spaces, seniors also get to take the more interesting classes of East’s curriculum. Non-Western Cultures, for example, teaches the religions of the Eastern world. In addition to being taught by two teachers with different perspectives, the opportunity to visit art museums in New York City and Philadelphia distinguishes the class. “It’s great to be able to observe the actual artwork instead of just reading about it in a textbook,” said Valerie Shaw (’96).

Psychology is another special senior class where the students use their observational skills; the difference lies in the subjects being observed. Susan Kim (’96) said, “Although the outside projects and experiments are time-consuming, performing them is usually interesting because you’re always observing other people’s behavior.”

Journalism II, mostly run by the senior editors-in-chief, tests the students’ artistic and creative talents in putting together the school’s monthly newspaper. Additionally, seniors can openly discuss current issues and events that are usually not brought up in other classes. “Journalism II is a course where you can physically see your accomplishments instead of just receiving a letter grade for your work,” said Shaw.

Photography also makes use of one’s artistic talents in the ability to decide what makes a good picture. Aside from learning first-hand the process of developing a picture, the students can use class time to road around taking photographs. Ben Green (’96) said, “The course is a nice break for seniors because there’s not much work involved.”

Salima Cuseo (’96) and Susan Finale (’96) observe the shutter speeds of different cameras in photography class. They demonstrate that hands-on activities such as photography allow students to work on original and creative projects.

Big, Bad Seniors?

For three years, the Class of 1996 had been waiting to become seniors. Now that they are seniors, they are finally in the position to scare away the underclassmen and rule the school. Or are they? “They are not the superior towers I thought they were when I was a freshman,” said Nancy King (’97). According to the underclassmen, they just are not intimidated. Some underclassmen are more appreciative of seniors. Rosa Wu said, “Seniors have really made adjusting to East a lot easier for me.”

But how do the seniors really feel about underclassmen? Daniel Novack probably spoke for the Class of 1996 when he said, “The maturity level of a senior is much higher than that of the underclassmen, but you do not realize that until you are a senior.”

So, despite the seniors’ best efforts at intimidating the underclassmen, many underclassmen look up to them, ready to follow in their footsteps.

The Ups And Downs Of East

It’s virtually impossible for a senior to leave East without strong feelings about the past four years. Looking back, everybody can reminisce about what he or she really liked or really hated about high school.

Making new friends is one memorable high school experience that people look upon with fondness. Fae Benitez said, “It’s so easy to fit in at East because everyone’s friendly and everyone’s different.”

Most students appreciate the many extracurricular activities East offers, but admit that there are drawbacks.

“It’s great that East has so many activities to participate in, but because of this, the student body is separated,” said Matthew Walker.

The fact that East is ranked as one of the nation’s top high schools also influences students’ opinions of East. Sharon Lee said, “East is good because of the high rate of competition, which helped me prepare for college; however, some students don’t realize how superficial they are.” Although their opinions on East may differ, no one will forget their memories of East.

For some, it’s the pizza that keeps most students coming back to the school cafeteria line. Above, Catherine Kim, Susan Kim anxiously await for their slice of the pie. Others like Todd Kershaw, Scott Kamil, and Prakash Chandra wait apathetically for something new. But it looks like it will be fries again for the 180th day.

Our Memories Of East

As seniors leave the halls of Cherry Hill High School East and venture out into the corridors of the real world, one may well wonder what memories of East they will carry with them on their journey through life. First, there is the "I-can’t-wait-to-get-out-of-here" approach of Paul Grossman who said, "I doubt that I will miss anything about East, although I could be wrong. Only time will tell."

No one will ever miss the passes needed to go everywhere and the hall monitors who accost students at every corner, demanding to see them. Another thing that will not be missed is the infamous C-wing intersection where crowds mill and trampoline sleepy students. "I’m looking forward to not having to walk around clumps of underclassmen everyday in C-wing intersection," said Tina Phillips.

Besides the physical aspects of East, the people have made favorable impressions on seniors. "I will miss all the wonderful friends I’ve made at East," said Pat Kelly. Keeping in touch with friends will be easier than ever because of e-mail and the Internet. And, of course, reunions will offer seniors a chance to see their friends again and to reminisce about East.

After studying amino acids in their text, Ben Green and Beekee Wadler perform a lab to supplement their learning. Labs such as this one are memorable learning experiences.

Cosmetology students Amy Galindo and Jostelle Corso won’t ever forget washing the hair of this fake head. The skills that they are perfecting will help them with their future "real life" customers.

How East Remembers Us

As the seniors graduate from their lives at East, they enter a new dimension in their lives, filled with the same laughter and tears that made their years at East memorable. However, some of those great memories of East remain even after the seniors leave their home. They've made a difference in the school, whether they were seen as standards of excellence or just friends. Underclassmen Pratima Vardhana (98) says, "I think all the underclassmen look up to the seniors, but the seniors are nice about it; they take time out to talk to you, and they're not even embarrassed to say Hi in the halls." Another underclassman Lydia Kim (98) agrees with Vardhana. "The seniors' friendliness sets a good example of good comradeship for the underclassmen." Upperclassman Brian Chow (97), however, sees the power of the seniors—"there is a definite unity amongst them; from an SGA officer's point of view, this year's senior class really sets a standard for the rest of the school." Nancy Chawla (96), editor-in-chief of Eastside, agrees with Chow. "The strongest mark we've left is in the strength of our class." John Chung (98) sums it all up by saying, "The seniors' individual talents in different areas, along with their strength and unity, played a crucial role in making the school what it is today." Even after the seniors graduate, they have left their mark on the school and will still live on in the memories and impressions of the underclassmen.

Features Editors Nicole Cerquettella and Jill Lovejoy work on a page layout with Ed Di Messo, Eastside's Editor in Chief. The product of these late days is yet another interesting issue of Eastside.

Need another hand? Senior Joanna Stahl and Kayce Cherry try up the stairs, carrying books and snacks, among other odd and ends for another hectic day at school.
SENIOR STYLE

What am I going to wear today? Do I want to wear something preppie or go with something grungy? These are the questions on most high school students' minds. Seniors, on the other hand, have a very simple way of dealing with this problem. They just don’t care, as long as their outfits are comfortable and look good. Leslie Miller said, “We wear whatever we want to wear. I’m a blue jeans everyday kind of person myself.” Min Ji commented that, “The senior style is unique and has a very different and wide range. People dress from the preppie style to the skater style.”

The seniors have a style of their own that doesn’t involve major trend-setting clothes, only a simple little preference known as comfort. Greg Gaden said that “stuff that feels comfortable and is presentable” is what’s in.

Tammy Hepps remarked, “As underclassmen, so many people dressed to fit in a certain crowd or impress upperclassmen.” Now, having found their own social niches, seniors do not need to dress to create identities for themselves. They know who they are.

Janice Hong and Maia Adleman show their individuality by wearing clothes they like. They are oblivious to the current trend and dress only for themselves.

Refuting Generation X

If you look up "slacker" in the dictionary, you would probably see a picture of a typical teenager - a couch potato staring blankly at a television screen, absorbing absolutely nothing into an already empty brain. This portrayal exemplifies the Generation X stereotype.

But is this generalization accurate when it comes to East seniors? In response, Jennifer Lee, president of the Cum Laude Society, said, "By observing the initiative, persistence, and hard work of my peers and the stereotype that we are nothing but slackers is truly a misconception distorting..."
The Stereotype

Conferring with Mr. Nation about the upcoming debate, Jamie Lustbader and Edward Di Marzio await his opinion of their plan. Mr. Nation, however, is satisfied even before reading their work. "Ed and Jamie have made the past few years a highlight of my teaching career," said Mr. Nation.

Other students agree. Edward Di Marzio, East's Board of Education representative, said, "I think students today are driven with a passion for action and a curiosity which is often overlooked."

East students truly are highly motivated, as the many awards and honors the school has earned show, but they are still teenagers. SGA president Tony Zappazodi said, "We're hardworking and responsible, but we know how to have a good time and relax."

Seniors at East obviously refute the Generation X stereotype. As they step from high school into the real world, they will face many other stereotypes. But with their determination, they can also prove those wrong.

During a free moment, Dana Morris and Neil Derman confer with each other about selling advertisements for Eastside. As Business editors, they know that they have to work hard so Eastside can maintain its excellent quality.

Dressed uniformly in East's school colors, the class of '96 files in with the rhythm of "Pomp and Circumstance." While this event represents one of the most accomplished moments of a student's life, the nostalgic look sadly back at the good times of high school. Every senior will remember high school for the good friends they made and the good times they had. On their last day together as the class of '96, graduation, a landmark occasion they have been looking forward to for years will be their step into the future that awaits them.

Senior Woes

The recipe calls for Higher Education night, the common application, teacher recommendations, your official transcript, and a personal statement (optional). Mix together and heat at stress level and you get one very nerve-wrecked senior.

Maybe senior year is not as easy as it seems. College applications create sort of a numbing headache that tunes out the rest of the world.

You have nothing personal to state in your personal statement; you realize that your SAT scores could not get you into clown college, and while everyone else seems to have everything else in order — you can not decide what you want to do with the rest of your life.

Your guidance counselor does not believe you have not chosen a major yet. You shrug your shoulders and try the next question. Why do you want to attend this particular university? Good question, why are you applying to Wisconsin in the first place?

Just when things are not looking good, when it seems that you are going to be living with your parents for the rest of your life, you manage to fill out the application at the last minute. You skipped the optional essays and exaggerated about being president of your youth group, but at least you got it done.

A few months later when you have managed to forget all about college applications, you get the letter in the mail. You close your eyes and pray that it is some admission officer's mistake, they actually let you into college. The envelope looks big. Not too big, but definitely not small. Well maybe not small. You look at it again and it seems to be the furthest thing from big.

Finally, after hell week in which you have decided where you want to go, you are starting to relax. The only things left to do are find a roommate, buy bedsheets, graduate, pick your classes, take down all the posters in your room, get a credit card, and try the college food.

OK, maybe relax is not the right word. But as long as you are not plagued by applications and you have a fuzzy idea of what you want to do, you can take the opportunity to exhale. After all, you have been holding your breath since the first day.

In the fall, seniors find themselves in the guidance office flipping through catalogue after catalogue of college information. Fortunately, Ken Worliko has the help of dedicated counselor Mrs. Linton to make the task a little more manageable.

Satisfied with making their mark at Cherry Hill East, Bryna Kwartz, Ari Starkman, and Kim Wolf look toward the school with a sense of closure, prepared to open a new chapter in their lives. Though they leave behind a part of themselves, they take the memories of their high school years with them.

The idea of a time capsule, something by which to remember these past four years, forced seniors at East to recall their most memorable moments here. "I would put in my tennis racket and all our team trophies," said Abby Radbill, a member of the East tennis team. Some students were not as definite about what they would include. Jamie Lustbader, Editor-in-Chief of Eastside, started off with: "I'd leave an edition of Eastside..." and then trailed off.

Of course, every senior had those special few items that he or she would include. Ben Green said, "I guess I'd put in some of my CD's, like Jimmy Hendrix. I'd put in my football jersey and my Sega." Jeeun Choi said he would include his lucky 8 ball and one of his hats.

But a few seniors chose items to reflect their current philosophy as a teenager, such as Monica Kim. She said, "I'd put in my photo albums, pictures of my friends, prom pictures, souvenirs of places I've travelled, and my favorite book."
Imagine this: you are a freshman coming into high school; it's a new school that you have never been to before. You are nothing in this vast ocean of teenagers. There are so many new faces, and you do not know what to do. All that runs through your mind is, "Don't look and act like a fool!"

This is the prominent thought of many freshmen coming into East. Most freshmen do not want to present themselves as morons, so they just follow the "cool" students around. Throughout their next few years, they start to "hang out" with true friends. "Senior year is a time to find true friends, after four years of searching, everyone is just themselves by the final year. No one has the time to deal with fakes," said Jackie Lichtman ('96). As a result, more seniors do whatever feels proper, and do not care how they act.

Seniors feel indifferent because they know that few people will laugh at their style. "As a senior, you don't have to hide your emotions, you can be yourself," said Gregg Goldenberg ('96). By their final year, seniors have established their own identity through a culmination of their high school experiences.

Scott Eastwood, with his aquamarine spiked hair and distinctly alternative way of dressing, is certainly one of East's more individual seniors.

Here, with his newly dyed orange-yellow hair, Eastwood confirms that he truly knows and is comfortable with his own identity.

Memories Of East

Although complaining about East seems to be a favorite pastime of many students, most seniors can find some enjoyable things about it. Science labs rank first on the list. The ever present danger of singeing one’s hair while leaning over a Bunsen burner or crushing one’s fingers with falling 500 gram masses fills every lab period with excitement. The labs allow students to see textbook concepts at work and serve as a diversion from a week of dry lectures. Jae Won Choi (’96) said, “Even though I got soaked several times, water fights in Chemistry 1 and II brightened my whole day.

The teachers of East have also changed seniors’ lives for the better. Sandeep Rathi (’96) said, “Although he is not my regular teacher, Mr. Lerner has given me great advice about biology, especially in reproduction. Because teacher’s help, some seniors have noticed improvements in their work. My English teacher helped me develop my grammar skills, which made my papers more forceful,” said Sarah Bluhm (’96).

Seniors have also enjoyed the wide range of extracurricular activities offered at East. “I like that there is a great variety of activities for all types of people with all types of interests,” said Peter Honig (’96). After-school activities allow students to spend more time with their friends. “I like painting signs after school because my friends and I sometimes drop paint on each other,” said Anne Chu (’96). With exciting classes, helpful teachers, and fun activities, there’s a lot to love about East.

TRICKS TO GET THROUGH SENIOR YEAR

You don't think you are going to make it through the 178 days of school left.
Your books have gotten heavier, your classes harder, and your days longer.
Luckily, there are a few ways to survive, and the seniors are well aware of them all.
"I go to my guidance counselor after every period. I couldn't survive otherwise," said Jason Lefkowitz. It's a valid excuse. You are applying to college, and you do need help to guide you there. It's your future: flip through brochures, watch videotapes, listen to college representatives speak. Who knows, maybe Chihuahua College is right for you.
If that doesn't work, there is always the gym locker excuse. Only seniors, though, have it down perfect. You pull outside with a hammer, two jackravennes, and a frustrated look while the rest of your class is putting golf balls. You sadly explain that your locker just won't open. No, you don't know why this is the third time this week it has gotten stuck.
Your teacher sits you down; he wouldn't want you to get hurt playing a sport that apparently requires gym shorts. You pull out your pillows so you can sleep while the rest of your class searches the field for their lost golf balls.
There are other tricks to make it through the day, but the most popular is going out to breakfast. Olga's, Danny's, and Friendly's are filled with seniors who 'forgot to do their second period English homework. And as a growing teenager, you need good nutrition. Breakfast, after all, is the most important meal of the day.
For those seniors who have mastered these tricks, school can be a breeze. With breakfast, broken lockers, and guidance appointments, you are left with only one period of what you thought would be a terrible Monday. Lunch.
Whoever said senior year would be difficult was never truly a senior.
Rachel Katz jokingly cheats off Risa Sang-Ura's test, demonstrating a favorite technique for good grades of some students.

Vikash Panda ('96) prepares to hit a powerful backhand before going on to win his match at the Moorestown Classic. "An important part of playing tennis is keeping focused," said Panda. "You have to forget about everything else and concentrate on the game at hand."

Carefully eyeing the ball, Brian Chow ('97) determines where to line up his arms. Perfect positioning is an important component of making a strong pass to the setter.

Christine Allen ('97) cheers on batter Jami Reiner ('96), who must reach first base before the ball does. Said Allen, "The enthusiasm of the team urges players to do their best."

Kevin Roche ('97), one of the volleyball captains for the '96 season, shows off his powerful jump serve. Perfecting a jump takes incredible timing and a lot of practice. "We always work each other as hard as we can. Some of our best games of the season are in practice," said Roche.

Springing Into Sports

By mid-March, the minds of most students wander to the approaching summer vacation. While the average student finds it hard enough to concentrate on school, finals, and SAT's, the spring athletes must also strive to keep focused at practices and games. Nevertheless, motivation among team members does not slip. Indeed, the drive to win often soars to new heights. Amanda Hartung ('96) said, "I love the hype at the end of the year. It is intense, and it gives you so much energy."

The spring season, like every other, requires a great amount of dedication from the players. With the pressure and the power of the hype, love for the game drives this dedication. The moment they cross the finish line or make the final goal, all doubts about playing dissolve. "At the end of the year, everyone is also alive and full of energy. Instead of being exhausted, we are pushed even further by the chaos," said Allison Singer. As every sports player knows, energy and spirit are perhaps the two most important characteristics of a strong team. Every year, among spring athletes, these two qualities rise with the temperatures.

GOLF: Coach Sheppard, Andrew Ittleson, Gregory Bengamesco, Shaun Upjohn, Bryan Beany, Jeffrey Mencucco, Mike Stiglitz, Coach Nec.

Gritting her teeth in determination, Kayce Cherry (‘96) cradles the ball as opponents run to stop her. Teammate Susan Kim (‘96) said, “Kayce is an outstanding athlete with the ability to weave in and out of any defense.” With Miss Schoeckel’s reinforcement, the team has learned the importance of such maneuvers as cradling, faking, and ground ball pickups.
Leaders Of The Pack

TEAM. A simple four-letter word that means much more than it seems to: unity, cooperation, determination, achievement. But a team cannot be successful without talented leaders. As Allison Singer (’96), co-captain of both the girls’ varsity soccer and lacrosse teams, said, "All seniors play a big part in varsity sports teams; they carry the responsibility of setting an example for the younger players. The captains reinforce this job and bring the whole team together."

Because experience comes with age, seniors have the job of demonstrating what they know to younger team members by helping them at try outs and later at practices and games. The leaders' experience allows them to accept defeat and comfort the other members when the situation looks bleak. "It is the job of the captains to raise the morale of the team and to motivate the athletes to do well," said Vikash Panda (’96), captain of the boys' tennis team.

Having the necessary experience also means having a good connection with the coach. The seniors are familiar with their coaches' expectations, and can use the knowledge to lead the team in the right direction. The coaches count on the seniors to organize the team.

Seniors obviously contribute much to their team. Underclassmen have the opportunity to show gratitude for their help with Senior Day, when the younger team members surprise the seniors of the team with food, posters, and candy. On both sides, Senior Day is almost like a holiday. Cathy Kim (’96), member of the girls' lacrosse team, said, "On Senior Day, you really feel appreciated and realize you're an important part of the team."

Every gaffer knows that an accurate putt is the most crucial play in the game. While practicing their skills, Shaun Upjohn (’95) makes sure that Jeff Mankowski’s (’95) club goes directly back before he makes contact with the ball.

To show unity, the girls' lacrosse team has a pre-game ritual of raising their sticks together, and then saying a cheer for good luck. "It shows that we are ready to play as one," said Susan Crocetti (’97).
His eyebrows knitted in intense concentration, Austin Wang ('96) bears down hard to keep a lead over his fence competitors. In track, Austin prefers to tackle the long distances rather than the short sprints. "I have a peculiar affinity for long distance running; my nonconformist beliefs attract me to events that few individuals have the guts and determination to compete in," he said.

With perfect form, Matt Selverian ('96) takes a practice swing to prepare for the pitch. His intense concentration overrules the chaos of the fans and the determination of the pitcher.

Fully armed in his baseball helmet, gloves, and cleats, David Doe (96) slides into home base, only a few feet behind the catcher.

Matt Waller (96), setting up for the pole vault event, has been a member of the track team for four years. A combination of upper body strength, technique, and concentration, pole vaulting requires a great amount of energy and drive.

Jinxing The Jocks

Walking around ladders, handling mirrors carefully, and staying away from black cats are familiar ways of avoiding bad luck, but East athletes have some original superstitions of their own.

Many students have rituals that they perform right before the start of a game. Deepa Krishnan (96), a captain of the volleyball team, said, "During warm-ups I have to get four serves in. If I get the fourth in, I stop, but if I don't, I keep trying until I do." Joanie Wang (96), who also plays volleyball, said, "I have to bounce the ball five times before serving it or else it won't go over the net."

The idea that what happens right before a sports event affects the outcome of an event is a popular superstition. A member of the football team, Mike Johnson (96) said, "Nobody can say the word 'injury' or describe an injury around the team. If they do, we all knock on wood praying that an injury doesn't occur to ourselves or any other player."

Many popular superstitions or traditions among East's athletes involve clothing. Joe Padlo (97) said, "For baseball, I have to put on my right sock before the left. I've been doing it ever since tee-ball." Frank Zmuda (97), who plays football said, "I have a certain pair of socks for game day. I also always wear a certain pair of cleats for practice and a different pair for games."

Other athletes follow similar traditions with their uniforms. Some wear a certain undershirt, or a specific pair of socks for away games and another for home games. Though many people consider superstitions to be meaningless, East's athletes constantly follow rituals that are sure to ward off bad luck and ensure success.

Zoning in on the goal post ahead, Marie Houry (96) controls the soccer ball with fancy footwork to score for her team. Howie realizes that every little point counts because one goal can make the difference between winning and losing.
Poised carefully on the balance beam, Ashley Gordon ('96) demonstrates the strength and flexibility necessary for gymnastics. With many years of experience behind her, she has a vital edge over all of her competitors.

After a tough meet, Jackie Worthington ('96) takes a drink of water to try to cool off. One of the most dedicated members of the cross country team, Jackie's hard work always pays off in competition.

... the difference
Preparing to return the ball back to her opponent with her powerful forehand, Marie Chen ('96) plants her back foot firmly in order to balance herself. For the past few years, she has demonstrated great dedication to the team, practicing even on her own free time.

1995 Fall Stats 185
Road To Victory

Bus rides can be long and monotonous unless you are a member of a fall sports team on the way to an important game. Since these athletes often travel long distances to games or meets, they have found clever ways to pass the time and prepare for the event.

Bus activities vary greatly from team to team. Cross-country team members use bus time to calm themselves before stressful meets. "The atmosphere is very relaxed. You don't feel the pressure of the run," said Kevin Roche (97) a member of the cross-country team.

While some teams try to relax, others spend the bus ride psyching themselves up. To get ready for their games, the girls' volleyball team enjoys singing "Lean on Me" and screaming their favorite cheers. "The bus ride is one of the best parts about a team, especially the volleyball team. It's a time to get to know each other by sharing each other's company," said Betsy Nees (97).

Some teams find that the best preparation for a day's competition is no preparation at all. The members of the boys' gymnastics team stick to "low key" activities such as listening to music and, of course, sleeping, as they travel to their away meets. "Gymnastics competitions demand a high energy level, so the best way to prepare is to take a nap," said Brian Tobin (98).

The bus activities vary greatly from team to team, but for every sport, the ride provides a chance for teammates to spend quality time with one another before the big event.

Feelings of excitement edge in on Ja-Shin Tsang (96) and Deepa Krishnan (96) as they board the bus for another varsity volleyball game. "While I'm going to an away game," Ja-Shin said, "I like to prepare for it mentally by reviewing some strategic moves. That way, I can walk into the game with the confidence to win."

While scanning the field for someone to receive his pass, Ben Brandt (96) maintains control of the ball. In order to promote team unity, the team, led by co-captains Brandt and Shaun Stanford (96), goes out to dinner every night before a game.

A combination of dance, tumbling, and originality, the floor exercise in girls' gymnastics takes much time and dedication to perfect. A.J. Heffner (96) likes to begin her floor routine with a dance step. A.J. said, "Throughout my four years of gymnastics, it has been a lot of hard work, but also a lot of fun."
Coaches Moehlmann helps his athletes in any way he can. In addition to teaching them about the game of soccer, he offers advice on conditioning as well. Moehlmann even takes the time to loosen Prashash Chandra's (96) muscles before a game.

Positioning herself carefully under the ball, Nancy Brill (96) makes a pass to the team setter. The pass is the first and central part of running a bump, set, spike offense.
Money Matters

Athletes walking around school in their uniforms or talking about banquets is common at East. But who stops to think about where the money for uniforms and banquets comes from? Not many people realize that it in order to pay for team activities, the team members and booster clubs must organize and participate in various fundraising events.

Since the school board doesn't pay for nonessentials, it's up to the players to raise money for them. As a result, athletes often end up selling various items to their friends, parents, and fellow students. Jamie Rosenberg ('96), a member of the cross country team, said, "We sold Stevie's Chewies, and the money we made paid for the team to go to Pizzeria Uno together."

The players aren't alone in fundraising though. The booster clubs, which consist mainly of parents, help raise money. Jim Bryan ('96), a football player, said, "The Gridiron club, which is the football booster club, is very well organized and the parents are really involved. They supply us with a lot, and support us the whole season. It seems as though our team would not be as successful without the booster club."

Austin Wang ('96), a soccer player, also appreciates the booster clubs. "Every year, the boosters make a massive fundraising effort so that we can have new equipment. The banquet is the final effort of fundraising that ends the season on a good note," he said.

The booster clubs also do more than just offer financial support. Shaina Holmes ('97), a gymnast, said, "For the past three years, our parents have been fighting to keep gymnastics alive. We wouldn't be able to compete and have fun without them."

Looking down field at the goal ahead, Devon Gick ('98) and Jill Smith ('96) make their way past the opposing defenders. Using their speed and skill, they split the defense wide open.

Tahira Jayesurja ('96) competes for East in a cross-country meet. One of the most strenuous sports, cross country demands training every day, even through bad weather and off seasons.

Practice makes perfect in gymnastics. Varsity member Brian Tobin ('98) practices swinging scissors as he concentrates on keeping his entire body in the proper position. "Pommel horse is the most difficult event in men's gymnastics. You have to practice every day in order to become good at it," said Tobin.

Kirsten Cattell ('97), the varsity sweeper, makes an amazing dive to clear the ball from East's goal. Because of her hard work and dedication, her teammates have voted her captain for the 1996 season.
Balance, strength, and a little bit of spice make the recipe for a good shoulderstand. As he practices his parallel bars routine, Joey Meier ('97) counts the seconds that he holds this difficult position.

Erika Yakaian ('96) makes a sensational save as ball comes soaring towards her. As a first team all-conference player, she is a valuable asset to the varsity field hockey team.

BOYS' GYMNASTICS: AJ Kees, Rebecca Sellers, Alyssa Sax, Coach Frank, Fabio Kwon, Jeff Cohen, Jeffrey Roseman, Jay DellRosario, David Lauer, Allen Kent, Josh Blum, Brian Tobin, Anwar Wellington, Brian Friedrich.

At the Olympic Conference meet for cross country, runners take off head to head, pushing to gain an extra foot over their opponents. Cross Country athletes train each year by running and lifting weights to complete their 3 mile races.

With his body straight as a board, Jeff Rosenman ('97) raises himself into a horizontal position called a planche. Like most actions in gymnastics, this position requires great strength and concentration.

FIELD HOCKEY: Linda Szczurek, Devon Glick, Colleen Keller, Christine Allen, Kirstin Cattell, Michelle Rosenberg, Kate Umlah, Manoa Basikian, Kristen Connor, Megan Tsang, Maureen Sloon, Susan Yaffe, Wendy Manus, Jill Smith, Bridget Hawkesley, Erika Yakaian, Ryoko Ohara.

Quarterback Don Hampton ('97) runs a reverse in a spectacular play against West. Hampton received the honorable position of varsity quarterback as a junior, an accomplishment surpassed by few.

Abby Radbill ('96) and Karen Melzer ('96) celebrate after winning a tough point. Coach Ralph Lipri credits their winnings and leadership to their compatibility and teamwork. "They lead the team by example," said Lipri.

"Pressed" To Win

In any sport, there is always the pressure to win. Many people count on the star athlete to play well: the team, parents, even friends. Most importantly, though, after hard practices and pep talks from the coach, athletes want to play well for themselves. The pressure for athletes rises when the press is there, photographing every move they make. Nonetheless, athletes of almost every sport—from football to tennis to basketball—will agree that being recognized by the paper is a great honor, despite the pressure it creates during the game. Abby Radbill ('96) said, "It's awesome when everyone sees your picture in the paper. You finally get the credit you deserve."

With added recognition, however, comes added responsibility. When the eyes of the media are on them, athletes feel as though they are under so much scrutiny that every minor mistake seems like the end of their athletic career. "You worry that if you mess up, not only will everyone notice, but they will also remember," said Ben Green, football's starting varsity running back. While few newspapers will ever report the errors of a specific player, the pressure to play a good game certainly exists. Like true professionals, though, East's athletes are willing to sacrifice some peace of mind during the game for a little hero-worship afterwards.
Ben Green ('96), the starting free-safety of East's football team, clings tightly to the opposing player's leg in a successful tackle. Teammate Marc Harris ('96) said, "Everyone is familiar with the remarkable and almost innate skill Ben has for playing football."

GIRLS' TENNIS: Rebecca Rosen, Abby Radbill, Danielle Jacobs, Minnie Chen, Tanya Scarlett, Tracy Scarlett, Coach Ipt, Tovah Ross, Karen Melitzer, Becky Sendrow.

East Scores Big ... In A Number Of Ways!

The game of lacrosse hinges on teamwork. Players work together on and off the field to accomplish their goals. "Being friends off the field really helps when it comes time to play as a team," said Tina Kang ('97).

Blocking the base is an effective strategy in softball. Amanda Hartung ('96) makes sure the runner comes in contact with the glove before reaching third base.

Teresa Liao ('98) wears a grimace as she competes against Edgewood High School in the hurdle event. The event for the girls track and field team includes ten high hurdles in a distance of 100 meters.

Competing in the 400 meter race, which is one lap around the track. Ben Brand ('96) leads in the event. Combining both speed and endurance leads to Brand's successful win in this event against Eastern High School.

Catcher Dan Grady ('96) practices his throw to second base during warm-up between innings. Besides guarding home plate, throwing out players trying to steal second base is another one of a catcher's many responsibilities.
Life After High School

During the morning announcements, we often hear about athletes' record breaking performances and astonishing plays, but what happens to the competitors after high school?

In many cases, East's athletes continue their excellence in college. After four years of practices, matches, and meets, students are not ready to give up. "I plan to dive on the collegiate level for both my personal enjoyment and to improve my diving ability," said swimmer Anitra Kass '96.

Other athletes choose to keep playing, but just not "officially". "Basketball took up too much of my time in high school," said Stuart Brooks '96, "but I still enjoy playing with my friends."

Students who would like to continue have the option of playing at a less competitive level. "I hope to have fun playing basketball in intramural leagues" said Brooks.

However, many athletes plan to temporarily put their sports careers on hold. Deferred by the time commitment, students often get involved in other activities. Baseball player, Dave Doe '96, said, "I probably won't compete on the varsity level. I'll need my time to do schoolwork, and other things."

For the most part, as East athletes graduate high school, they graduate high school sports as well.
Anitra Kass (‘96), a member of East’s swim team for the past four years, demonstrates excellent diving form. “The best part of being on the swim team is the unity I find among my teammates. They’re always cheering me on during an event,” said Kass.

Adam Burke (‘97) races toward the finish line as one of the top runners in the grueling cross country run. Said Burke, “At this point in the race I’m working really hard and all I care about is beating the person in front of me.”

AND THE CROWD GOES WILD!

BOYS BOWLING: Steve Sazinskey, Matt Bookbinder, Joe Padilo, Jason Stuart, Justin Martinoff
Before every basketball game, Lori Malkin ('96) sings the national anthem. "She’s a great singer and I think it really gets the crowd into the game," said avid fan Chris Johnson ('96).

POISED IN MID-AIR, Miles Fullard ('96) executes a perfect three-point shot despite the menacing attitude the opponent presents. Courage and risk-taking are essential to the success of a team.

BOYS BASKETBALL: Jeff Rubin, Paul Kaplan, Brian Freedman, Pete Wasserman, John Kittikis, Ufusoma Pela, Miles Fullard, Dean Fisher, Ben Brand, Vishal Partik, Scott Plasky

CHEERLEADING: Gail Hymowitz, Kristin Mozzello, Ashley Gordon, Erica Nathanson, Lori Malkin, Lauren Short, Lauren Merlin, Amy Weinstein, Hannah Kim, Jaclyn Swar, Michelle Bang, Marissa Bashkin, Amy Steiglitz

GIRLS BOWLING: Melissa Boyce, Alison Hess, Cheryl Bobb, Nina Evangelista, Sarah Pearce
“I’ll Never Forget . . .”

As the seniors end their year, they are faced with countless opportunities, and leave behind an equal number of memories. For the athletes of the school, their minds are sure to be filled with thoughts of the team. Perhaps the foremost and best of their memories are those of all their teammates:

“My best memory is the bus ride home from our last cross-country meet. We really felt like a united team, especially because we knew it was our last time together.” - Jamie Rosenberg

“My best memory of girls’ volleyball is Senior Day. All the other team members gave the seniors food and encouragement. The seniors were very touched and were psyched for the West game.” - Helen Jan

“The best memory in track was our coming together as a team. We were able to become good friends and better competitors.” - Ben Lee

“I’ll never forget the times we went out to breakfast at 8:00 in the morning for cheerleading.” - Jackie Lichtman

Others remember one special teammate:

“I’ll always remember our two hour trip to Fair Lawn for the semifinals of the state tournament. Andy Cho, our singer/volleyball player extraordinary, performed a solo of ‘The Lion Sleeps Tonight’ while the rest of the team accompanied him.” - Howard Yeh

“My best sports memory was the experience of being on the #1 tennis team in the state, though it is widely unrecognized. Though I was never a varsity player, I got to see my friend, Vic Panda, go from being a dedicated freshman to being #1 on NJ’s best team.” - Louise Y.

And yet others’ best memories are of the team’s great accomplishments, or just of the playing experience in general:

“One of my fondest memories is when our gymnastics team made it to the sectionals for the first time in more than four years.” - Anitra Kars

“I remember the last game of the state lacrosse tournament that we lost. But our coach, Mrs. Schooley, told us that she was still proud and that she was the happiest coach in the world. I realized then that it’s the game, not the winning that counts.” - Cathy Kim

“I think my senior year of swimming was the best of all these years. Not just because we had a winning season, but because our team was more united than ever before.” - Courtney Smith

“I’ll never forget my junior year of baseball when we beat West twice, and made the state tournament.” - David Doe

Then there are those whose best memories are purely personal:

“My favorite memory was cheering for the FISHL.” - Jake Peltzman

Varsity cheerleaders Lauren Merlino (‘96), Michelle Baeg (‘97), Jaclyn Snior (‘97), and Hannah Rim (‘97) form a difficult mount. At every East basketball game, cheerleaders raise the spirits of the players and spectators.

Leaping into the air, John Katakis (‘97) manages to slip one hand behind the ball while his teammate Brian Freedman (‘97) joins him in the effort to rebound.
Anyone who's ever been injured in a sport knows the uncontrollable excitement of entering "Dave's World." Things move fast in this hectic place and Trainer Dave Callan sees what seems like millions of athletes in the course of one day. But do these athletes come here because they're injured or because of the luxurious surrounding that are available?

Well, that's tough to say. Dave's training room comes complete with two big bubbling whirlpools: one warm and one cold, two padded tables for sitting comfort, a bed, a television, all the ice and water you could possibly want, and a vast selection of exercise equipment.

But Dave doesn't just see athletes during the hectic time after school. Working the whole school year six days a week, Dave also sees athletes during the school day who want early treatment.

Ellen Hur '97 said, "It's good to have a trainer in school, at least for me. It's helped a lot when I get my ankles injured during soccer and lacrosse season."

The trainer's job includes a wide variety of responsibilities. According to Dave, "The athletic trainer is responsible for evaluation, recognition, prevention, and rehabilitation." Dave fulfills more than just his job requirements. Athletes have grown a sort of attachment to trainer Dave. Austin Wang '96 said, "He seems to be a very personable and affable trainer. He makes an effort to get to know everyone and that shows he gives the extra time."

Undoubtedly, the famous training room downstairs has become a central part to the athletics at East.
Mr. Knouse helps out Billy Deal (99) with his placement in the police and the strategy behind the event. Said Coach Knouse, "The team swam above their potential at a couple of tough meets this season, which we found outstanding."

Amy Adelizzi (96) shoots a seven foot jumper while Cherokee opponents attempt to block the shot. With Adelizzi at the helm, the Lady Cougars fought their way through a difficult season this year.

Vishal Parikh ('97) dribbles down the court, his eyes searching for a possible play. A starting guard on the team this season, Parikh's alertness and speed helped lead East to many victories.

Swimmers Rebecca Ruschmeier ('96), Rechel Wetz ('98), and Liz Braverman ('96), demonstrate that sports breed friendships as well as competition. The girls' hard work and support for each other certainly showed in their amazing record of all wins and no losses.

As fellow bowling team members cheer him on, Justin Marinoff ('97) throws the ball down the lane in perfect form. Famous for his hook throw, Marinoff satisfies his expectant teammates with a strike.

Runners Rob Linden ('96), Dan Novack ('96), Adam Burke ('97), and Corey Levin ('96) sprint to another cross country finish. About thirty opponents participate in every cross country meet, and it's every man for himself in the race to the finish.

Varsity player Susan Yaffa ('97) dribbles through a wall of opponents as she drives to the hoop for a layup. Working hard everyday, players learn the skill of weaving in and out of numerous defensive pays.

Heather Anderson (96) listens attentively to announcements during homeroom. Most students depend on homeroom announcements in order to keep them informed about activities at East. But with all the commotion during homeroom, sometimes it is hard to stay informed.

Tired And Tired - er

For most East students, taking it slow and easy in the morning is not a usual routine. Compared to the relaxed end-of-day activities, the morning routine is actually pretty hectic.

So what exactly is it that East students do in the mornings that makes it so busy? For some, the minutes before homeroom are a time to get everything set for the coming school day. Jane Kim says, “My bus gets here so early so I go to my gym locker, music locker, talk to people in the halls, and by that time, I have to run to homeroom.” Students urged on by the announcement, “one minute to homeroom” run to make the homeroom bell, a sight that is not rare in the mornings. Reviewing, or just starting to study test material is a popular activity for students in homeroom. Steve Sazinsky (97) says, “Homeroom is hectic because it is a time when you get all the homework done that you should’ve done the night before.”

On the other hand, after the bell sounds at 2:25, for students like Tricia Kang (99), “the pressure’s lifted until homeroom the next day.” Most students run home, a place where relaxation begins. Getting home for Christine Allen (97) means “watching cartoons and relaxing,” only to face yet another day in what seems like a few short hours.

After a long tedious day, Lauren Taylor (99) relaxes by doodling in her notebook. Notebook doodling makes the teacher believe that the student is actually taking notes and concentrating on the class.

   b. a library. Your copy of Wuthering Heights and Shakespeare's Collection of Plays collect dust. When you have Cliff Notes, who needs to read the actual books?
   c. a toxic waste dump. Last month's lunch still sits at the bottom growing moldy. You had to steal goggles and gloves from Chemistry just to get past the reeking fumes.

2. You know you have to study for your History test because:
   a. you always write down everything in your homework planner.
      Now if you had only remembered to bring it home.
   b. Homeroom ends in three minutes and History is first period.
      Plenty of time for your best friend to teach you everything he knows about the Civil War.
   c. You always study for your tests ahead of time, with a study group of seventeen friends in your basement listening to loud music.

3. In the morning, you wake up:
   a. an hour before you have to drive to school. Unfortunately during that time, you conveniently remember that you have to do your math homework, study for your English test, and bake a batch of non-fat cookies for health class.
   b. six minutes until the bell for homeroom will ring. You have planned it so that if you take a shower in two minutes and dress in one, you can make it to school in time if you drive as if you were racing in the Indy 500.
   c. sometime around 10:00. You were up late watching Leno last night which means you will now have nine lates. Instead of taking Saturday school, you roll over and go back to sleep for the rest of the day.

4. When you have three tests on the same day, you:
   a. don't panic. You weren't planning to study for the test anyway.
      After all, it's second semester senior year. Who knows, maybe you will take the day off.
   b. wake up around 7:00 after drinking four cups of coffee and taking a vow to stay up late and study.
   c. get confused and study the wrong vocabulary words for English, give your History teacher a summary of the life of President Kennedy, and get to Biology class with a diagram of the cell division on your hand.

5. When you get your intern in homeroom, you:
   a. throw it in the bottom of the locker. That way, no one will ever find it and they can't blame you for your grades.
   b. trash it immediately. Everyone knows that they don't really count for anything.
   c. stuff it in the pocket of your jeans, and remember to show it to your parents about three days after Mom washed your laundry.

6. You have a week to get your permission slip signed for the field trip your class is going on, you:
   a. give it to your parents as soon as you get home, and then forget to get it back in time to turn it in. You are guessing that your lack of organizational skills are genetic.
   b. get sent down to grade level for forgetting your parents signature on the morning the form was due. Worst of all, on the way down, you remember that you are 18 and could have signed yourself.
   c. claim that you can't find the form. Maybe your locker ate it?

7. When you need to find something in your backpack:
   a. you bring along a flashlight and start digging.
   b. You're smarter than that. You only put books, homework, and notices from school in your bag. The important stuff, you put in your pockets.
   c. you don't. You would rather face the consequences than risk your life searching through your bag. Same concept with the Bermuda Triangle.

8. You pick out your schedule every day:
   a. by random guesswork. This is how you ended up with three electives, instead of a math.
   b. by trying to see how many lockers and study halls you can get away with. The rest of your classes are aimed at picking up the members of the opposite sex.
   c. by letting your guidance counselor choose. Isn't that what they are there for?

9. You start writing your term paper:
   a. three weeks in advance. The teacher let you pick out the topic and you chose late night clubs. Now, you are always busy doing your research.
   b. during lunch on the day it is due. It suspiciously resembles your best friend's paper, but you don't think the teacher will figure it out.
   c. 1:00 in the morning. Right after Letterman, on the night before it is due.
      If you copy the information from Encyclopaedia Britannica, you should be done in about twenty minutes.

10. Every day, you only carry the following items with you to class:
    a. a pencil. As long as you can write, you figure you can borrow paper, a book, and a calculator from the person sitting next to you.
    b. the textbook. Unfortunately, you brought your history book to math class, your English book to biology class, and the latest John Grisham novel you are reading to chemistry class. You should have gone with choice A.
    c. a hat. Your theory is that if you pull the hat way down over your eyes, your teacher won't be able to see you. If she can't see you, she can't call on you. If she doesn't call on you, she won't figure out that you didn't remember to bring anything else to class with you.
Among the chaos of a hectic day, Matt Malone (97) tries to recall which locker is his, what class he has next, which books he needs, and where he is. Many times the five minutes between classes give students insufficient time to recover from a tough class, generating a general state of perpetual.

The correct use of light is the key to a good photograph. Matt Walker ('96) focuses his camera while maintaining the appropriate aperture, the device that regulates the amount of light allowed into the camera.

Taking advantage of school time to get started on homework, Pooja Raval ('97) works diligently in the cafeteria. Raval chose to take second period study hall to make time for extra-studying during school.
Motivation At East
The Cure For Senioritis

One of the perks of seniorhood, besides driving to school and trampling freshmen in the hallways, is exemption from finals. If a senior has an A average in any course after four marking periods (or two marking periods for semester courses), he or she does not have to take the final. This incentive motivates seniors to keep up their grades throughout the year and prevents senioritis. "I'm going to work hard so that I can avoid taking most of my finals," said Niti Dalal ('96). Although seniors have praised this policy, juniors who take classes with seniors complain that the policy is unfair. "The seniors do not deserve this privilege," said Mike Choi ('97). "We do the same work and get A's, but we still have to take the finals." However, the juniors and many others do not realize that the seniors deserve this privilege more than anyone else. Without the seniors to support it, East would crumble to the ground. Exemption from finals is a long-overdue recognition of four long, hard years of work. In fact, the current policy does not go far enough. All seniors should be exempt from all finals, regardless of grades. How else do teachers expect seniors to concentrate on school work when they have been admitted to college and the warm spring air beckons them outside?

Getting in a few minutes of homework time, Imran Ahmed ('96) spends his study hall in the library completing his assignment. Though afflicted with sentiments, Ahmed works hard to avoid having to take the finals.

Dave Giacco ('96) takes the first step in becoming an aeronautics engineer as he attaches the cabin to his miniature blimp.
For Art’s Sake

Art classes offered at East provide students with a break from their usual hectic schedules. The fine arts department is designed to expose students to a wide variety of different types of art. Commercial Art, a popular art course at East, teaches students to recognize practical outlets for art ability. Students learn to use art to their advantage by illustrating a commercial message. Most students appreciate the relaxing environment that an art class provides. Michelle Rosenberg (’98) said, “Mr. Jackson turns on the radio and lets us talk as long as we’re productive. It’s very soothing.” East’s photographic art program consists of three progressive courses: Introductory, Intermediate, and Advanced. Students have the opportunity to fully round off their photographic experience at the high school level. James Daniero (’97) said, “I took photography because I wanted a break in my schedule and it’s a hobby I’d like to develop.” Most students value the freedom they are given in their art classes. Beckie Wadler (’96) said, “Art classes let students express their creative sides, whereas regular classes focus only on the academic sides of students.” Other students agree, finding art classes as an opportunity to express a side that is usually repressed in most academic classes. “Painting is one class that gives me a chance to truly express myself,” said Sarena Dorado (’99).

Top Ten Reasons to Take an Art Class
10. It gets you out of class during PAVAS.
9. You’ve always wondered what went on in F wing.
8. Finger painting was the only concept you really mastered in kindergarten.
7. You may not be able to draw a straight line, but isn’t it best to be “well-rounded”?
6. When you go to a museum, you might actually appreciate the art, instead of just standing in front of it with a puzzled expression.
5. Maybe you’ll figure out if the Mona Lisa is smiling or frowning.
4. One year of fine, practical, or performing arts is listed as a graduation requirement in “Learning Opportunities.”
3. The “starving artist” lifestyle has always appealed to you.
2. You spend half your classes doodling in your notebook anyway — why not get some credit for it?
1. You don’t need a calculator.

Everyone enjoys the culinary arts as a break from the monotonous academic day. Ben Brand (’96) looks on in anticipation as Dave Mike-Mayer (’96) and Joaette Phillips (’96) try their hand at baking a delicious cake.

Paul Grossman (’96) enjoys taking some time out during the busy day to clear his mind in Advanced Photography class. Students appreciate the opportunity to express one’s artistic talent while selecting that perfect shot.
The media used in 3-D art range anywhere from paper mache to plaster of pans. Using materials other than notebook and pencil, Marci Plotkin ('97) enjoys assembling her entirely paper structure.

Photography students have the unique opportunity to be on both sides of the camera. Andrea Frade ('96) takes a break from her own work to model for a fellow photographer.

The Arts 211
While lab group work can elicit 84 minutes of talking and fooling around, Matt Lanza ('96) and Steve Varon ('96) review the procedure for shark dissection to ensure precision in their work.
While most people would wince or cringe at the sound of "dissection", Brooke Lerman (’97) coolly plunges into the world of vertebrate anatomy. Students interested in pursuing a career in a biological field often take the class in preparation for the future.

Biology student, Jennifer Hepp (’98) measures water for an experiment involving osmosis in a model cell. Biology students often set up model situations to understand abstract life processes.

Gross Anatomy

A heart, a cow’s eye, a pig, and a frog. To the average person, these things seem to have nothing in common, but not to the biology students at East.

An important part of the biology curriculum is the dissection of several different organic substances. After learning about the body and how it works, seeing the real tissue reinforces the subject matter.

In one biology class, Jaclyn Kaplan (’96) reaches into a bag to pick out a blue cow’s eye. She then cuts off the fat from the eye and chops it in half. After cutting the eye, she labels the different parts. Later, Kaplan said, “When I cut the eye, juices were squirting everywhere. This was by far the grossest thing we did all year.”

Another unfortunate victim of the biology department’s scalpels is the fetal pig. The pig is not yet born, but it is old enough to be dissected. “I felt bad dissecting it. It was so cute,” said Anitra Kass (’96).

(ribbit. ribbit.) The frog also finds its way to the careful scrutiny of the biology classes. The student’s assignment is to cut open the frog and label the different organs of the frog’s body. Rich Bloom (’97) said, “There are black mushy eggs inside the frog and when you move the frog, they fall all over the place. It’s really gross.”

However, not all the biology students found dissection disgusting. Daniel Baratz (’97) said, “I think it was cool. You got to see what all the parts are.”

The emotions about dissection vary among East students. Some hate killing animals for an experiment, some think the whole process is disgusting, some don’t care one way or the other, and some enjoy cutting open animals. The only thing that all of the students agree upon is that once the animals enter the biology lab, they do not leave.
It may be an unwritten law that whenever a class splits into groups to do outside projects, one or two well-organized students get stuck in a group of procrastinators. Despite the best efforts of the organized people, a large part of the project somehow remains undone until the day before it is due. In the mad rush to finish the project, strong bonds of shared suffering are created between group members. "No matter how well you think you know someone, you see their true nature when working on some project in the wee hours of the night," said Helen Jen ('96).

When Mr. Carr's English 4AP classes perform Shakespearean comedies, each group must first cut the script to fit in the allotted time of one period. Then, the students must spend endless hours memorizing the dialogue and rehearsing. "I got to work with people I didn't usually communicate with," said Jennifer Lee ('96), "and after all those hours, they became my second family."

Before Psychology Child Day, groups of psychology students design tests to administer to every age group of children. Howard Yeh ('96) said, "The unpredictability of the subject's response made this project fun." The tests gather information in order to support theories students develop regarding language, motor, or cognitive skills.

The Humanities class does group projects every marking period on aspects of the non-Western culture studied during that period. "Although our class is very large, working in small groups allows us to get to know everyone," said Hyunae Chang ('96). Students have presented Chinese calligraphy, Indian music, and Japanese puppet plays to the class.

Full of hidden metaphors, themes, and symbols, Shakespeare is difficult for a person to understand under "normal circumstances." Stuart Brooks ('96) transcends into a state of meditation to arrive at the true meaning behind the cryptic words.

Pete Wasserman ('97) exhibits intense concentration as he ponders the complexities of Pre-calculus. Wasserman pays close attention as the teacher explains a homework problem.
As the end of the period approaches, clockwatching commonly takes the place of paying attention to the lesson. Andy Slipyen ('96) takes the popular activity a step further by demonstrating his extreme desire to escape the confines of the classroom.

ATTENTION, PLEASE!

Although the main purpose of high school is learning, classroom atmosphere seems designed to distract students from that goal. The classroom may either be too cold, in which case the student must pause to put on a sweatshirt, or too warm, which means that the student must take the sweatshirt off. Then, the perpetually unprepared person who sits behind the student needs to borrow a pencil or a piece of paper. Soon, the minute hand of the clock inches toward the end of the period, and the student has to begin gathering his belongings for the trek to the next class. Sometimes, any type of distraction from the teacher is welcome. “Some teachers talk about themselves all the time,” said Eileen Shubach ('99). “They think their lives are so interesting.” Other teachers create boredom in different ways. “I get bored when teachers just lecture and don’t try to get the class involved,” said Michelle Di Biase ('96) while Oren Firestein ('97) said that he found it hard to concentrate because “the classes move too slowly.” Because of the boredom, students have devised ingenious ways to get through each class period:

The Top Ten Most Popular Things To Do In Class When Bored

10. Sleep, preferably with eyes open.
9. Launch spitballs at the person sitting in front of you.
8. Do homework that was due yesterday.
7. Fantasize about what you’re going to do that evening/the next weekend/when you graduate from high school.
6. Calculate the number of seconds left in the period - then the number of seconds left in the school year.
5. Look out the window at Kresson Road and count how many white cars pass by the school.
4. Pray for a fire drill.
3. Carve satanic messages into the desk to scare the person who sits there next period.
2. Concentrate on the heating vent so hard that you drown the teacher out.
1. Write “I am so bored” over and over and over . . .

Notebooks often make convenient pillows for exhausted students like Nick Diamantis ('96) who tries to catch a few precious minutes of sleep during class.
Why Bother?

At East, music students work in D-wing, art students in F-wing, but the dark corners of East's hallways and classrooms are reserved for frantically-studying students, sweating to retain the very last minute pieces of important test information.

Yes, in case you weren't aware of it, East students do study at home, yet sometimes their preparation at home just isn't enough. Where do they find time for extra studying? Michelle Bang (97) says, "I study in the car on the way to school, on the stairs to homeroom, on the bus, in gym, or, in case of emergencies, in the bathroom." Although many students study in odd places, homeroom and the cafeteria seem to be East's favorites for last minute studying.

For the most productive study areas, however, East students have to admit that home is the best place. But, where and when at home? Susan Kim (96) says, "My room, because then I can focus on what I'm studying and I don't have outside distractions." For other students, however, distractions are inevitable and studying doesn't start for hours. Bang says that her most productive study area is "at home at 1:00 A.M. with a big cup of coffee." Despite the fact that studying at home provides the best results, students like Jaewon Choi (96) still insist on last-minute studying in places like "the gym locker room."

Finally, there is, of course, the small percentage of students with an entirely different attitude. Erika Ferrantino (98) says, "I don't like to study."

One of the greatest contributions of Cum Laude is the tutoring services they provide for fellow students. Secretary/Treasurer Sam Kuo ('96) asks Bobby Chang ('96) what subjects he might be interested in teaching.

Vice President Alia Bruskman ('96) and Byron Kawitz ('96) discuss the formalities of the upcoming induction ceremony. This year, the candlelight ceremony was followed by a catered dinner.
Passing The Torch

The Cum Laude Society

If you had entered East on the night of April 19th, you might have seen a strange ceremony taking place: students in red robes lighting candles in the dark. "Has some kind of cult taken over the school?" you might wonder. No, the event you were witnessing was the induction ceremony of East's chapter of the Cum Laude Society. The top 15% of the Class of 1996 were inducted into the society in April while the top 5% of the Class of 1997 were also honored. The Cum Laude Society was modeled on Phi Beta Kappa to recognize academic excellence in high schools.

Besides honoring academic achievement, East's Cum Laude Society is also a service organization. A tutoring program implemented by Vice President Alla Brukman ('96) offers free tutoring by Society members to all East students. "I quite enjoy giving up my party time to impart portions of my huge knowledge reservoirs to others," said Tammy Hepps ('96). Another example of the Society's service is the holiday drive it ran in conjunction with Amnesty International and the Asian Cultural Society. This drive provided blankets, canned goods, toys and clothing to area shelters, "I think the holiday drive was a great success," said Secretary-Treasurer Sam Kuo ('96).

During the second semester, teams of Society members and teachers competed in a Trivia Bowl that tested their knowledge of arcane subjects. "The Trivia Bowl had two main purposes," said President Jen Lee ('96), "One, to celebrate knowledge, and two, to let club members bond." Cum Laude accomplished all these activities with a new advisor - Mr. Schnell. Another change occurred in the induction ceremony, which was catered for the first time. "We wanted to make the ceremony more formal and upscale this year," said Brukman. As Dana Ahn ('96) said, "I like Cum Laude because not only do we tutor others, we also get to be in a cool induction ceremony." What more could you ask for from an extracurricular activity.

- The success of Cum Laude's annual toy drive hinges on good publicity. Jeff Simons ('96) carefully paints a sign reminding students to bring in new and used toys to the bin at communications.

- In preparation for the Trivia Bowl, Austin Wang ('96) and Helen Jen ('96) test each other's knowledge on various topics of study.

"Let's Hear It For 'THE BOYZ'"

There once was a troop, a motley sort,
Who defended SGA; their office was their fort.
From the Junior & Senior Classes they came.
Now, let me see if I can recall them by name:
There was Tony, the President,
Who always took packets of Doc's trident.
He was a student leader
And a real teaser.
When it came to his Officers-four,
He knew the score.
He took his duties very seriously
And often listened to the music of Sheila E.
This college-bound senior had a destiny
Because he would never settle for mediocrity.

Let me see...who is next on the list...Brian?
Gosh, if I'm not lyin'!

Wow! That man was bright!
And as a VEEP, he was typically right.
For the job, that is;
He was no "dir".
The only regret was that his voice was low.
Boy, did that anger Doc so!

Brian also had a melodic head.
You should have heard him sing "Lady in Red".

Then, there was Adam, another VEEP.
For when the Reps. didn't support, he would weep.
Because he held his position with care.
This man was very fair.

"To write articles for EASTSIDE!" he would cry.
And his goal would be to see how much he could try
To get students--one & all--involved.
This was a matter he always solved.

Adam was a quiet sort;
However, get him angry, and he would retort.
Who's next? Who can it be?
Why, it's Eric, known as "B.M.O.C."

He & Doc would tease each other all day.
"Lightning Vivone!" B.M.O.C. would often say.

At Doc's desk, he established his space.
For everyone knew this was "his place".
He was a jovial, fun-loving guy,
But his loyalty was to East & SGA...no lie!
However, there's a secret about B.M.O.C.
He loved his candy & took it from the Officers & me.
Last from the troop is "Jeff for Publicity",
A mild man, full of felicity.
He, too, had the smarts needed for a university
And could recite lines from HAMLET with great accuracy.
This SGA man had the upperhand
Of bringing information throughout EastLand.
He was good, a right noble chap,
But when it came to Kurtis Blow, he couldn't rap.
As an Officer, he did his best,
For he sought wisdom, honesty, & the rest.
Now, you have heard them, all mentioned by name.
These five guys brought a lot of fame.
Because of their talents at LTC...tis true.
I know because they told me on August 22.
At "Octoberfest", they entertained seniors of the town
And got mad when Doc said, "Mingle around! Mingle around!"
In homeroom, listening to classical music was their nightmare
And changed the station when Doc wasn't there.
To Rider U. they went
And saw their LTC friends from the Summer they spent.
Before you knew it, November had arrived,
And for "Variety Show", they each got a high-5!
They broke the school record for attendance
And brought in big bucks; that was tremendous!
"Spirit Week" Dance came,
And over 500 brought them fame.
Juniors & Seniors had such a rivalry;
They accused each other of villainy.
"Cities" was the "Spirit Week" theme.
So when a Class Advisor asked this team,
"Please help me choose a place to go!"
They all sang, "Key Largo, Montego...oh, baby, why don't you go to Kokomo!"
It was Thanksgiving Day, & everybody was there:
Marching bands, floats...that ole Homecoming Spirit was in the air!
Seniors won "Spirit Week".
But the Juniors vowed revenge to seek.
Christmas brought them gifts galore
At Doc's, they celebrated as friends forever more.
Their term has now ended with dignity,
For they served the student body with such loyalty.
Thus, let it be known throughout the land that never will there be Five Officers like "THE BOYZ" to Dr. W!
To Joanna:
Always keep that gleam in your eyes, your devilish smile and the warmth of your heart!

"Keep your face to the sunshine and you cannot see the shadows."

We love you,
Dad, Mom, Chad Gram & Bubbi

Jodi,

Thank you so much for the past 5 years- for the memories, the laughs, and the unbelievable friendship you’ve helped to create. You’ve given me a part of you, a part I will treasure forever. I love you.

Love always,

Jaclyn

Jaclyn,

Our friendship is so special to me, one that I deeply cherish. During the last 5 years, we have grown so much together. No matter how far apart we are next year, you’ll always be close in my heart - not to mention, just a phone call away. You’re the greatest friend and I love you!

Love always,

Dear Nikki,

On the day you were born, your horoscope read "Independence rears its head". Little did we know how true that would become and how strong your spirit would have to be.

We have always believed in you, but more importantly, you learned to believe in yourself. We taught you that no matter how many things there were in this world "to do", no one was capable of doing each and every one of them, so you must concentrate on the things that were possible for you. Only you could determine what was possible and trying your best was all that mattered. You did! Many times over you have proven that "can" and "can't" mostly come from within. Frankly, you get your greatest pleasure from doing things others think you can't. "Do not follow where the path may lead. Go instead where there is no path and leave a trail." You have.

Use these past seventeen years as a strong foundation upon which to build yourself a happy and successful future. Continue to have a positive impact on the lives of others. Remember "We make a living by what we get; we make a life by what we give." Remain humble, gracious and caring.

You have made us very proud parents and we wish for you all that you want. Never doubt that we are here for you. Congratulations on a successful journey to where you are today and best of luck along the path to where you are yet to be.

Love,

Dear Mandy,

Saying goodbye to years of memories, some heartache, and lots of fun is next to impossible. Knowing that I shared it with you, and that you were and always will be there makes what seems to be ending, truly last forever. For four years our friendship have made us inseperable, and no matter where the world may take us. In my heart, we will always be inseperable. So if ever in the middle of the night you need a shoulder to cry on, or a really good laughs, I will always be there for you. You are my ultimate light and inspiration, what more can I say than thanks and I'll never forget you.

love always,
your best friend forever. STEF

We look at you today and see
The same beautiful eyes
That looked at us when you were a baby

We look at you today and see
Our beautiful daughter, no longer a baby
But, a beautiful person

Those beautiful eyes always Shining with excitement
Those eyes that only see the good in people
Those eyes that warm everyone's heart

STEFANIE --

I've watched you grow from "peanut" to "princess" to young woman, From the terrible twos to the tearful 10s to the terrific teens. I've heard your baby gurgles, your girlish squeals, and your adolescent giggles. I've tasted the sweet joys of young motherhood and the bitter tears of having to know that it's time to let go. But most of all, I have felt -- I have felt the racing heartbeat as you explored your world and set out for paths unknown, I have felt the pride of knowing that you have succeeded in all you set out to do. As you venture into adulthood, remember that I am always here, that I will always love you unconditionally, and that Dad will always be "watching," "hearing," and "feeling" you from above.

Love,

Tony,
You always had the muscle, You always had the smile.
Then when you got to CHE, You really showed your style.
So President as you graduate, Look upwards, head held high.
Ambition is your "Forte", So reach up towards the sky.
Your family is behind you, As you strive to reach your peak.
Remember always who you are, Because TONY is unique.

Love and congratulations,
Mom, Dad, and Arnold

Liz

BECK - The beginning of a beautiful friendship! Living at each other's houses. Bagels. And... Birthdays at Fridays. I know how to do it from school, but... Summers at the shore: Andrew, Martin, Mitchell, Michael, Moonbeam... Land and company. Kucera and Chenger. Suddenly feel the urge to run (after some guy). Random individuals walking into trash cans. Nic running into the parade on the Boardwalk - that duck mowed me down! Eternal card games - oh dam! Penny candy because we were broke. Do you guys charge for the sugar on the bottom of the bag? Run, Run... WELCOME TO OCEAN CITY... retreat! Hey Liz - sit in beach chairs much? Liz always hurting herself. Bill... nuff said. Oh yeah, nice cat. Nic, absolutely sick on the boardwalk! Teaching Nic to play pool. Eating sugar. Donald our ski instructor - "How ya doing?" Nic - "oh just DUCKY" Nic gargling "it's a small world" with Mono when we should have been in Aruba! Late night QPS labs. Late night swims in Mexico - fully clothed. Pool side chats about everything. Liz, estás casada? Yes I'm tired. Oops. Lizards. Nude beaches. Guys in Mexico sure know how to whistle. 40 ft. sailboat. 12 people, free beverages - nice, real nice! That geek! The rib place with crabs walking on the floor. Senior Mr. Pepe's sure knows how to serve 'em up (and charge for 'em)! There's a drinking age in Mexico? Chinese food in Mexico - there's a reason they didn't keep filling up the water! Liz, why are you puiking - he was cute! Bus stop - here's a bag, I'm busy! Showering together, losing water, finishing on the beach. Making friends while showering on the beach. Charades of 'llaves' and being locked out. Liz - "uh... where's the bathroom?" Sleeping thru dinners on the plane. Beef tips, anyone? Sleeping thru everything on the plane. Contemplating leaving Nic in Dallas because of that obnoxious alarm she set off. Liz's incessant belching - what a woman! Cape Cod. Hyannis. Provincetown. Freaks. The Green Paradise (puke green). Sleeping in the car: Liz, you left your teeth on the seat! Sing to the foot. Hey Nic - gum OUT the window, not ON it. Nose pickers in traffic. Do my eyes look SEDUCTIVE? Two Johns - must get confusing in the dark. Trips to the library - the lake at the library, of course! A great collision - afterward at Liz's - one up one down - hey Liz, I get it! Age doesn't matter - they're both immature anyway. Steve Miller concert - need we say more? Family occasions at Nic's house. Holiday dinners at Liz's house. Hey Liz, what's Suck it and Sim it? Uh Nic, that's Sukkot and Simhat Torah. Olive, bet, vet, gimmel, hail, hay - or something. Nicole Cerquistain or perhaps Cerquisteborg. Cerqueia and Trashy. Paloma means dove - and Prostitute! Thank Nic. Car ride to Florida. Harassed by seedy foggies in Florida. Our baby pools. Liz spilling all of that poor stranger's peanuts. Our almost trip to Spain. Summers of corruption where we did everything we said we never would (many more of these to come, together). Sad departures - foreign and otherwise. WE'RE BACK! The football game in the rain. Jamie's party - Hey Nic, sleep on bathroom floors much? Jamie's deck - Hey Liz, good thinkin', goin' outside and stuff. Good aim, Nic. Liz, THAT'S dinner or HE'S dinner? Finally driving. Poor Fred's license plate cover - he feels so violated! Take the wheel out, too. I know it's in here. Always saying we should write our memories down, but never quite getting to it. So many memories, so little... MONEY!! The Best of Friends forever!
Pledge: Milli Vanilli; house cake; too much butter; pig; check my butt; Nintendo driving; shockies; Mtv; pool dance; answering machine code; phone; our biggest fan; Hershey Park; Son-in-Law: "You have chickens, I love chickens!"; Golden Grahams; Oh my!; cartoons; Springfield, apple picking; "the perfect peach"; Halloween; Ocean City summers; "for 9 years?"; six more months; Cinderella; one last cry; Max & Chadley; "It hasn't hit you yet?"; repeat after me Anthony...; spit; do yourself; nails; mouthing it; dee dee; concoctions; sticky stuff; "Did you do it yet?"; first kiss; "Yes, I am an a?"; "I can't hear!" "Can't hear what?"; I gotta pee; not uh, really?; chalkboard messages; "That's not how you spell it!"; Ugh!; Rumey 500-Forever; TCBY; "What's goin' on?"; Boyz II Men concert; 7-11 runs; Blockbuster; in the real world sitting on the floor in Barnes & Noble; "Take off aye!"; punching bag; #69; "I hate everyone"; Do bears defecate in the woods?; "Wanna draw popcorn?" (Gloria); Susan—you're a pee pee head; "If you want to vent, call my machine."; going in circles in the parking lot; Blizzard of '96; "You have what?"; "It's like them, and then it's like US!"; turbo Lucy; "What are you a freak?"; D.B.'s ugly girlfriend; Lucy's sensitive spot; Jerry & Eric; waffles; "We're so cute!..." Best friends are hard to find, hardest to leave, and impossible to forget.

ANNA THE LATE BLOOMER

When Anna entered East she refused to compete. She refused to take Honors courses and she reluctantly completed assignments. Then she met Louis & Tammy & Vic & Josh & lots of caring, nice and bright kids. Then she met Mr. Simon. He changed her ideas about herself. Anna produced scholarly research papers. She created beautiful works of art. Anna was elected V.P. and chaired Adopt-A-Grandparent. She bloomed and she blossomed. Anna has been blooming ever since.

WE COULDN'T BE MORE PROUD OF YOU!

WE ALL LOVE YOU SO VERY MUCH –

WHAT A BETTER WAY TO LET IT END THEN HAND IN HAND WITH A FRIEND.

It's fun doing things with you:
I hate making a fool of myself alone.

It is a rare and special thing who will remain a friend forever.

Yesterday brought the beginning, Tomorrow brings the end.
Though somewhere in the middle, We became the best of friends.
michele & abby

It all started back in fifth grade when Abby arrived with her big pants. Everyone thought she was a dork as she hid behind the truck. Once Michele got to know the infamous Abby Radbill, their friendship began and so did the memories . . .

A big smile. A little tear. Together, they could be the symbols of our friendship...
Friendship gets better with time, but ours is already pretty wonderful.
We're so close that somehow it seems we've always been part of each other's lives.
It's fun to look back and remember the good times all over again. It's hard to hold back the tears when we remember all the fun times we've had over the years. We thank whatever good luck brought us together.
And when it comes to friendship...
... it just doesn't get any better than this.

"Our Shining Star"

Words can not express how proud we are of you and your excellence in academics, leadership, and activities galore.

These accomplishments have brought a special kind of joy to our lives and have provided us with sooo many wonderful memories.

We love you very much and wish you health, happiness, and success always!

Congratulations!
Mom, Dad, and Family
Dear Jaclyn,

We see the photographs.
But we cannot believe the time has gone by so swiftly.

Have we really celebrated 17 of your birthdays?
Were you just learning to walk yesterday?
When did "guggledoo" become "W"?
Where is that beautiful little girl with the "cute face" and "suspicious look"?
What happened to our Brownie?
What became of dolls and stuffed animals?

Now we look upon you.
In awe.
We see a beautiful, sensitive, intelligent young woman.
When did this happen? Were we not with you each wonderful day of your life?
Couldn't you have taken just a little bit longer to grow?
We are not quite ready yet for you to leave.

But you will never leave.
Not as long as we have the photographs. And the memories.
And as we watch you take your place in the world, we will be unashamedly proud.
That is our joy, our privilege.
You will always have our love, our hope, and our prayers.
And should you ever be unsure of your footing, you will have our help and our support.
That is also our privilege.

From a beautiful little girl to a beautiful woman.
We didn't get any older. When did you?

Love, Mom and Dad

Dear Elisabeth,

When your name is in lights or on a marquee, in the audience we'll always be.
We know you'll be great, we know you'll go far You'll be a success wherever you are.
So off to college - a career to find,
Just remember, to keep in mind,
Whether a writer or superstar,
We'll miss you and love you....

just the way you are.

Andrea- You may say I'm a dreamer, but I'm not the only one. Ever since those memorable days back at Beck, we've shared that special bond of always being able to find a laugh when times were tough. I think we both agree that we'd rather laugh with the sinners than cry with the saints; the sinners are much more fun. From laughing about everything from Your Mama to guys (so he can make you *, it doesn't make him Jesus), we've managed to be amused by everything under the blue sun in the yellow sky. Although we're going to very different parts of the country, going out into the great unknown like a rolling stone, I want you to know that you'll always be my friend no matter what. I'll always be there for you because we'll keep in close CONTACT! Reading these memories will help us keep forever young.

With love and laughs,

Jenny

Congratulations Jamie

There are some who Say, “When you wish
Upon a star,
Your dreams will come true.”

But you now know
As you move from East’s red and white
To Penn’s red and blue,

That achieving Tough goals is a Sure way to bring Happiness to “Q.”

You always make Us proud, so our Hugs and kisses
Go each day to you.

We love you on this special occasion, always and all ways,
Mom, Dad and Michael
Dear Amy,

Congratulations! We are very proud of you and want to thank you for all the memories you have given us over the past 18 years. You are right! Life would be dull without you! We enjoyed every basketball game you played. May your future bring you much happiness and success. We will always be there for you.

Lots of Love,
Mom & Dad

Dear Amers,

Always wishing you the best!
Good luck in college.

Love,
Bob & Karen

Dearest Amy,

We love you and wish you every happiness throughout your life.

Love,

11:00 PM- The hallways of East are silent, barren, and dark ... but a faint glimmer of light escapes from a tiny cubicle near the student entrance. Traces of a lost civilization? Perhaps. The walls of this room harbor another world, complete with leaders, indentured servants, and its own microwave. The name of this microcosm — the Yearbook Office. Once again, the yearbook staff is working late hours to meet yet another deadline. Fueled with only pizza and Chinese food, these diligent, often insane, workers search for croppers, captions, headlines, and ideas.

These students have a remarkable ability to work in even the most adverse conditions. Every yearbook member can remember the chaos resulting from the relentless snow, countless captions, absent staff members, perky cheerleaders, lost/stolen pictures, and ... who could forget the cacophonous noises emitting from the screeching guitars, thunderous drums, and the harsh feedback of bands practicing in the cafeteria?

Yet, through all of these stressful situations, yearbook members help each other survive one deadline at a time, empowered with candy store sugar highs and solid friendships. Not only do the students bounce ideas off of each other, they also serve as one another’s “venting” partners. Stress is always better when it’s shared.

Despite the pandemonium, the amazing Yearbook staff always pulls together as a team. And the result of hours of frustration, brainstorming, and hell is ... the incredible yearbook you are now holding in your hands.

TOP 11 THINGS ABOUT YEARBOOK

1. Writing 10,000 basketball photo captions when you don’t know anything about sports
2. Bossing my staff around
3. Sitting in the brown chair so that you fall backwards
4. You can tell your parents that you’re staying in school late to work on yearbook, but go somewhere else instead
5. You can witness Mr. Carr’s highs from cake frosting, random Scottish accents, and impersonations of Arnold Schwarzenegger
6. Bonding with Mr. Corp
7. Howard Yeh’s obsession with a certain member of the Thespian Society
8. Your enemies’ names get mysteriously misspelled
9. Threatening to commit suicide by stabbing ourselves with pica rulers
10. Stalking is so much easier when you have access to everyone’s home phone numbers
11. Going insane at 11:00 PM on a deadline when 1200 pages are due
"Hopefully, through hard work and teamwork, we will produce a terrific yearbook."
-Monica Kim ('96)
