The future exists years, weeks, even seconds from now. Before stepping into the future, we meet people and experience events unique to each one of us. However unique individually, the experience we all hold in common is the time we spend in high school.

These years at Cherry Hill High School East play a significant role in our lives. They remind us of the joys we had, the disappointments we felt, and the friendships we formed. Not only do we ponder the past for memories sake, but we also reflect upon it to help guide us in life. “The farther backward you can look, the farther forward you are likely to see.” Winston Churchill.
Daniel DiFlavis ('98) and Eric Goldstein ('99) find time in the morning to chat in a virtually empty parking lot. Despite the fact that a majority of drivers take advantage of the last minutes before 8:00 to arrive to school, some students arrive to school early enough to avoid the morning rush. "You beat the traffic and miss all the hassles." stated DiFlavis.

Relaxing in the hallway, Emily White ('00) and Andria Herman ('00) find time to chat before heading for homeroom. Even though a majority of the student body falls victim to the morning rush, some students start off the day on the right foot. As White said, "I get to school early so I can relax before school starts."

Amy Lanne ('98) finds time for a healthy breakfast during homeroom. The few minutes before first period is the perfect time to finish homework, eat, or just catch a nap. As Annie Lai ('98) said, "I don't have lunch until sixth period. Since I don't have a lot of time in the morning, I eat breakfast in homeroom."

“There is one minute ’til homeroom, one minute ’til homeroom!”

Whether one is a senior or a freshman, East students must eventually experience the phenomenon that pervades East’s student body: “Morning Rush.” The havoc reigns during the last few minutes before homeroom. Hurdling obstacles and bypassing road blocks, students have to get from point A to point B with only enough time to think of an excuse for the homeroom teacher. One problem, as Ying Ying Dong (’01) explained, is that “you can never get anywhere (in the school) because there are just too many people.” Another problem is kids stopping in the middle of the hall to talk, thus creating a wall that congests the hallways for what seems like an eternity. The last few minutes before homeroom are also ‘prime time’ for frantic students scribbling last-minute essays or copying last night’s homework.

Circumstances beyond students’ control also play a part in the morning rush. Netanel Eliezer (’98) relates her experience. “Last year, my alarm didn’t wake me up … I had to run out the door with my shoes in my hands. It was good thing the grass wasn’t wet.” Perhaps the most bizarre story belongs to Karly Grossman (’98). “Last year, I got on the wrong bus to school. You see, when we were waiting for the bus, another bus pulled up to our stop really early … The bus driver said that it was the East bus, but we wound up at West instead.”

Crossing the parking lot with the morning sun in their eyes, Maura McKendrick (’98) and Rita Srivastava (’99) stroll into school. Some students who drive to school or hitch a ride with an upperclassmen find the morning rush to be nonexistent. However, there does occur the time when unforeseen circumstances can make students wish they took the bus to school. “Driving allows you to leave for school whenever you want but sometimes, you underestimate the speed of the clock,” said Eric Tsay (’98).

Diana Kang (’98), Johnny Kang (’98), Howard Chang (’00), and Diana Mark (’01) step off the morning bus for another day of school. The majority of students who take the bus to school find avoiding the morning rush to be an easy task. In fact, taking the bus to school is what keeps many students on schedule. “I take the bus in the morning because it forces me to get up and be on schedule,” said Diana Kang.
Out of all the relationships we have, friendship is one we hold dear to our hearts. For friendship is what binds us to other people and is truly one of the things for which we live. Whether it be for a teenager or an adult, high school is a special period in all of our lives due to the friendships we develop.

In all, several levels of friendships exist. One is called friendship which we hold with many people. We talk to and share jokes with casual friends. We say "Hi", "Hey", "What's up?" to them. smile, slap hands or hug them when we see them in the hall. It's important to have these relationships with people who amuse us and whom we, in turn, amuse.

Then there exist the deeper relationships that form between teenagers. These are your true friends, the friends you love. "These are the friendships that I make in high school that I hope will last through college and, hopefully, through life," said Maxine Stewart ('98). Not only do these friends sense when something is wrong and lend a shoulder to cry on, but they also laugh with us through the good times and share in our joys. Matt Denker ('99) said, "When I look back on my times at East, I'll remember all the funny things we did together and the fun times we had."

Occasionally, students form deep friendships with an elder, such as a teacher, coach, or hall monitor, on a level that they may not be able to have with their peers. Kim O'Bryan, a hall monitor, said, "When young people can have a friendship with older ones, they can see that skill later in life. I also think it helps them relate to children later in life because they're not always communicating just from their point of view. This type of friendship can last years to develop, or maybe only a few weeks. As O'Bryan, who is friends with many of the students at East, said, "Friendship is something that might come quickly or can last forever."

However, making any relationship last forever is difficult. When referring to relationships with peers, Vicki Chou ('99) said, "I know that we will inevitably drift apart through the years, but I hope with all my heart we will stay together forever."

As with all things in life, we appreciate something more when it no longer exists. Dr. Cho Kyung Kim, a science teacher, said that there is an old saying in Korea: "A friendship may take ten years to build, but can disappear in one instant."

Thus, as we progress, we should remember the people who made an impact in our lives. Though it is hard to keep together forever, a lifetime is worth than losing for those we love.

Ronita Basak ('98), Kate Muldowney ('98), and Hope Weinstock ('98) spend the remainder of the lunch period giggling over a note. During school, friends find the best time to "hang out" is lunch. Not only does a lunch break provide time for students to relax, but also share a little time between friends. "Lunch is the only place that I get a chance to see some friends that I wouldn't see otherwise," said Sara D'Alejandro ('00).

Frank Catrambone ('98) and Ferdinand Padilla ('99) work as a team while completing a physics lab. Lab courses provide the environment for students to work together and at the same time, develop friendships. "In physics, I didn't know half the juniors in my class. Now, I work with them in lab. Now, not only do I know them, but find that they are interesting and friendly people," said Christine Chen ('98).

Often, traveling buddies, Allison Schnepfer ('98) and Jill Sweeney, take a detour to the senior hallway to pick up a book. Often, meetings in the hallways are the only times many friends get to talk to one another during school.

4. Epilogue
To the left, Devon Segal ('98) listens to some helpful tips from Mrs. Sacca on art technique for an upcoming pastel-drawing project. Out of all the courses offered at East, electives provide the best opportunity for teachers and students to build rewarding relationships. Below, while paying for lunch, Jeff Potter ('98) has a friendly smile for a familiar face known to many East students. Besides teachers, students associate with other members of East's faculty, such as cafeteria workers daily. "I think that the cafeteria workers are the greatest asset that East has to offer. Every lunch is laced with love," said Howard Megdal ('98).

My favorite relationship

"... is my group of friends that I hang out with in the morning, because they help me catch up on the homework that I didn't do the night before."
-Arnold Luk ('99)

"... is with my guitar, whether in jazz band or on stage during concerts because no matter how I treat it, it's always there for me."
-Owen Hoxie ('00)

"... is with my friends because it's the only aspect of school that doesn't stress me out."
-Kim Vuong ('00)

"... probably is with my backpack because it always tries to weigh me down, but I always win."
-Peter Klimas ('99)

"... is my chapstick because it gives flavor to my day and enhances my motivation."
-Natalie Peretsman ('98)

"... is the vending machine because it provides my daily supply of chocolate."
-Sophia Rigatos ('01)

The five minutes between periods is the perfect time for friends to get together. Mike Krevolin ('98), Josh Polansky ('98), and Jared Sobie ('98) take advantage of the break between classes to exchange music. Due to the busy schedules of most students, school is the only place where friends can be in the same place at the same time.

With his cane on his arm, Mr. Keller discusses some papers with Mr. Wolff in the teacher's lounge. East provides an environment for relationships to form not only between students but also between teachers. This is not surprising since many teachers have worked with one another for a significant number of years.
From freshman year onward, Cherry Hill East has been trying to prepare seniors for their destiny out in the "real world." From clubs to sports to school work, the class of 1998 has been getting a taste of the variety of career paths ahead of them. For many, the future looks as varied and colorful as the leaves of autumn.

After completion of middle school, students get their first look into the vast corridors of Cherry Hill East. Reminiscent, many remember an image of high school as a big, endless building with ceilings high enough for giants. Ninth grade goes by, tenth, then junior year whizzes past. Then, as students rush to fill out college applications, many questions unexpectedly jump out at them: What college am I going to? What will I major in? What will the real world be like? However, confused as many may seem, some seniors as well as juniors already have ideas of what they want to do with their lives.

One senior, Jen Hepp ('98), expresses her hopes. "I think that ever since second grade, I've wanted to be a child psychiatrist. Also, the courses I've taken and the community service that I've done with sexually abused children have all made me want to pursue this career."

Similarly, Peter Lembesis ('99) has a specific career path he wants to pursue. "After high school, I'd like to major in business or political science. After that, my main goal is to attend law school." Some students seek careers that contribute to other members of society. "I think I've always wanted to help people. When I was little I remember being the arbiter between fights," said Sharon Hwang ('99).

No matter what the major, college, or job, students wind up in, many will surely have great memories of learning important lessons here. Using guidance of the teachers and the experience gained from East, all will make their dreams come true.

Preparing to take a picture, Pemneit Bhogal ('98) contemplates over the best angle to capture the beauty of the field of flowers. With photography, students frame the moments of today to preserve as memories for tomorrow. The teachers instill an appreciation, if not a love, for this creative process while at the same time, highlighting the career possibilities this field of art produces. "Although I have different aspirations, the photography course definitely expanded my horizons," said Bhogal.

Examining bacterial growth in Microbiology class, Mr. Robino compares pore plates with students Mahbod Mohazeebi ('98) and Jon Li ('98). East's science department is well known not only for its prize-winning teams, but also for the high level of academic courses. The classes prepare students for future careers in science since "we stress hands on work. Students really learn by performing; they really do the work," said biology teacher, Mr. Robino.

Lauren Thurm ('99) displays her flexibility while practicing her dance moves. Dating back to ancient times, the art of dancing has remained popular even to this day. With such a variety of fields, dancing opens numerous doors to the future. East helps students prepare for upcoming opportunities in the field of dancing via the performing arts department.
Searching the Internet, Neil Mehta ('98) uses the library computers to find information on a research topic. In this day and age, computers play a vital role in the day-to-day running of society. It has come to the point that one cannot enter a career without having some knowledge in this area of technology.

Holly Rice ('98) displays her beautiful painting depicting an angel surrounded by flowers. The painting courses offered at East provide students with opportunities to express their artistic abilities while at the same time, preparing the students for possible future careers in the art world. "Even though I'm not planning to enter a career in art, the painting courses help me express my creativity in diverse ways," said Winnie Liang ('98).

East is known for its rigorous curriculum. In order to keep their sanity, students resort to taking numerous breaks at various times throughout the school day. “After concentrating for forty-two minutes, the five minutes between classes revive me,” said Heather Cameron (‘98). Others employ the precious free time to socialize with their friends. As Jessica Lautman (‘98) said, “Because of my busy schedule outside of school, I do not have a lot of time to see my friends. Therefore, when I do see them in school, I try to catch up with them during the few minutes I have to spare.”

A few East students also use their free time for more unique tasks. “Today, I did not have enough time to shave. So, I had to shave between classes,” said Benjamin Kim (‘98). Whether it be socializing or shaving, students realize that free time is extremely valuable and, consequently, take advantage of every minute.

Almost every student, at one time or another, has succumbed to the temptation of resting during class lectures. Donovan Aitcheson (‘99) uses his bookbag as a pillow to take a break during class. “Classes can get so tedious that it’s easy to fall asleep,” agreed Katie Bleaken (‘99).

Shh! Andrew Shiflet (‘99) finds solitude in the library as he studies for an upcoming test. Many students view the library as a ‘peaceful’ sanctuary from the hectic school day. As Shiflet said, “The silence of the library helps me study and can also be calming.”

Although the rest of the student body rushes along, Mia Sorenson (‘98), Kriti Gwal (‘98), and Arin Brenner (‘98) step aside to discuss a book before class. Students find that taking time out between classes, even in the hallway, gives a little breather. “Also, as I walk to and from class, I like to socialize with my friends. Chatting always makes a day lighter,” said Mia Sorenson (‘98).
During the course of the day, Chris King ('98) puts his legs up as he reads the highlights of the latest Eagles game. For some students, reading the newspaper is not only a source of information, but also a means of diversion. "Reading about the events happening around the world helps me take my mind off the events of my life," said Sumit Niogi ('98).

Seniors Debbie Barr, Erin Weaver, Thi Vuong and Matt Soffer, and Spanish exchange student Irene Porter listen attentively to Officer Lazar during a senior assembly. Although most students listen to what's going on, some use the period to study or do homework. Either way, assemblies take the place of a class period and is something that can't be given up.
A look of studiousness crosses the face of Adam Lambert ('99) as he tries to figure out a Spanish question.

No matter how hard students try to experience the more relaxing side of student life, academics is an ever-present area of concern. "For me, Spanish is one of the most difficult courses. I try not to procrastinate and really try hard when I'm doing my homework or studying for a test," said Lambert.

Jane Cabalo ('00) spends some time after school to practice her French horn. One aspect of student life is focusing on a particular interest, such as music. Even though focusing on an interest requires work, there is a benefit. As Cabalo said, "There's no stress when I play the French horn because I like not only the music I hear but also what I play. I enjoy the hard work that I put into it and the sense of accomplishment."

Staying Focused

Student life. For a majority of students, the first thoughts the two words produce pertain to socializing or studying. However, student life does not merely consist of these two extremes. In fact, a more 'personal side' exists in student life which illuminates the uniqueness of individuals coming together to form East's student body.

Students often use their time to concentrate upon other aspects of individual interest. For example, students pursue their interests in music, sports, or even community service. "Although my major concern in school is grades, I also concentrate on activities such as FOP, which provides me not only with a means to help those less fortunate but also a fun and relaxing way to pass time," said David Blum ('99).

While some may focus on taking a break, participating in activities, or pursuing a talent, there exist those who have no particular focus on any aspect of student life whatsoever. A prime example is the contrast between freshmen and seniors. Whereas seniors may not realize who their teachers are or what rooms their classes are two weeks into the school year, freshmen, on the other hand, scurry about in frenzied states, focusing all of their concentration on figuring out where they are. As Balpreet Bhogal ('00) said, "I remember how during the beginning of freshmen year, I was running around the whole school, trying to find my classes. I also remember bumping into a lot of seniors who were taking their sweet time to walk to class, not caring if they were late or where they were going." Thus, whether playing an instrument, participating in activities, or not concentrating on anything at all, East students display variety in what they focus on in student life and to what degree.

The brush slowly swerves around the leaves and petals as artist Jamie Eskin ('98) works on a painting.

Painting as well as other electives offered at East provide students with a means to switch from focusing on academics to focusing on other areas of interests. As Eskin stated, "Painting really keeps me busy, but also lets me concentrate on the art and forget about other things."
The rest of the world fades away as Emily Scott ('99) begins planning a 'dream house'. Often, students are easily distracted by the chaotic events present in the surrounding environment. However, focusing on an interest has the benefits of escape to a place of solitude and relaxation.

As he earnestly digs into a book of art by M.C. Escher, Jayme Feldman ('98) is lost in a moment of admiration. When the academic side of student life slows down, students find the time to pursue other areas of interest. "I really like M.C. Escher's art because it's so different. He can go from no detail to extreme detail just like that... I like to draw, and so I really admire Escher's style," said Feldman.

While forgetting all her worries, Winnie Liang ('98) focuses her concentration towards completing her pastel drawing. Besides academic work, some East students focus a part of their life onto the arts. Not only do changes in areas of concentration help students escape the stress that results from academic work, but also benefit students in providing experience for diversity.

Passion For Fashion

What do flares, leather boots with five-inch heels, nose rings, band shirts, and wide-leg khakis have in common? They are all ‘fashion statements’ exhibited by the students of East in their unique ways.

Jeans and T-shirts are popular outfits for a busy student with not enough time to plan out a wardrobe. However, many East students do not conform to the popular standard of dressing. For example, students decide to pierce parts of their body, dye their hair hot pink, or wear spiky choker necklaces. Even though stereotypes surround these students, most are simply establishing a means to express themselves through fashion. As Erika Ezzi ('00) explained, “I like art. So when I wear an all-black outfit, chins, or high boots, I’m just trying to show the way I feel.”

“Another style seen at East is the preppy style.” Corduroys, long-sleeved polos, and button shirts are basically my favorite things to wear,” said Peter Lembesis ('99). Generally, the emphasis of many dressers seems to be on comfort. In a way, there students have a unique style of their own: relaxed. However, every one has a limit, explains Steve Lu ('99). “I don’t care about fashion, but I won’t wear a fluorescent pink shirt ... I make it a point to say normal.”

Despite the diversity of dress styles, one thing is for sure. As Joom Kim ('99) thoughtfully said, “Lots of comments are made about people’s clothes, but I think that you have to respect what others wear because it’s what they want.” This tolerance of personal preference prepares the student body for a world abundant with unique individuals.
Keeping out of the sun is only half the job of sunglasses, say most East students. Style is a major factor in the shades buying game. "The style factor played a big role in my decision to by these shades," said Brad Bellante ('00), sporting a unique style of the popular Oakley sunglasses.

Mike Dansler ('98) returns the ball in a game of tennis during gym class. Athletic clothing is not only worn on the courts and fields, but also in school. The style is trendy and provides relaxation throughout the tiresome school day. "Athletic clothing is not only very comfortable, but it is also stylish in this day and age," said Kevin Yang ('01).

When walking through the corridors of East, this trend of baby tees, as exhibited by Rachel Cohen ('99), Krista Wessner ('99) and Rosa Noll ('99) can't be missed. These days, many female students show off the style of tiny shirts. The trio agrees that "girls like to wear them because they are cute in them."

Bags, bags, everywhere! It's not surprising that among all the bags students carry, styles vary from the classic book bag to a GAP shoulder bag to the athletic carry-all. Such variety in style reflects the diversity of fashion that exists in East's student body. As Karen Vatun ('00) said, "I think students like to make a fashion statement with their bags."
There's a theory among the cynics of the world today that there is nothing to celebrate about.

Although life does become depressing at times, to say that there isn't anything to celebrate is to ignore the joy that life brings.

What about the warm glow that emanates from families sitting about a living room during a lull in their busy lives? What about the laughter that echoes in a room full of friends?

Pratima Vardhana ('98) said, "It is my belief that within each person exists a soft spot for celebrating. Celebrations bring the best out in everyone, and are of personal, sentimental value."

In 3-D Art, Mr. Ed Frasella and his students celebrated the coming of Fall by creating and wearing series of vibrant masks based on mythological themes (and by composing the collage to the left).

Some people celebrate certain occasions by giving gifts. Charlotte Liu ('00) said, "The main reason we started our Pollyanna is because we want to give each other meaningful gifts, not just stuff we pick up while getting gifts for everyone. This way, we can take our time to choose a meaningful gift, and in the end, everyone feels happy, because the gift is really from all of us."

During Multi-Cultural Day, Mrs. Helen Hu of the Math Department delivers a lecture on Chinese music and art. This day-long series of events gave everyone in the East community an opportunity to celebrate the wonders of our diversity.
39, 43, hike! Prepared to face the Senior onslaught, the Juniors continue their drive in the fight for a win. Outnumbered at least two to one, the sparse Junior team gritted their teeth and dashed the hopes of a Senior victory with a touchdown late in the fourth quarter.

As a pile up occurs in the endzone, Kristy Erickson ('96) holds onto a game tying touchdown pass, after being sandwiched between two juniors. With grit and determination, the Seniors were ready to play.

In A League Of Their Own
LET THE GAMES BEGIN

Everyone was really pumped for it when it was coming in the middle of October. Both the Juniors and the Seniors were ready to sack each other. All the players wanted to get on the field and pulverize the other team.

Then came the rain.

The first time the water droplets hit the dirt, everyone was cool with the rescheduling.

Fine, so the game was pushed back a bit.

Another storm, another delay. Now people were getting a little ticked off. What was with this rain?

Suddenly, the game got pushed back four weeks.

Clearly, some players were losing their drive to win the game. When the game was to be played, seniors busted out because it was their last year. Juniors didn’t seem to be so enthusiastic. There were about thirty to forty seniors, and, count them, eleven juniors. There was one girl who obviously didn’t help things along for Powder Puff. She was being pretty stubborn throughout the whole thing.

Bad girl, Mother Nature!
Andrew Grubb (’99) pumps up his fellow junior classmates for their upcoming challenge. Getting psyched is always a vital key to success in Powder Puff Football. As Grubb said, "I had to yell and scream to get the team fired up and ready to beat the seniors."

After a tough game, the Junior Powder Puff team rejoices on their victory while coaches and fans rush to congratulate the players on a job well done. Practicing in the cool, autumn weather as well as hanging until the end of the game to beat the Seniors was well worth the effort and determination put forth by the Junior team.

Battling the wind and frigid cold, Kristy Erickson (’98), a Senior Powder Puff team member, sprints across the field in her attempt to catch the football. This year, the girl's Powder Puff game was extremely close, as the juniors defeated the talented seniors. "I think it was a great game. Unfortunately, we didn't win. I wish Powder Puff was offered to freshmen and sophomores so that I could have more chances to play," said Erickson.

Speaking with years of leadership experience behind him, Senior class president, Eric Ciarelli, pumps up the Senior girls' Powder Puff team. Part of being a class officer is being there for your classmates, and giving plenty of support when it's due.
We Never Had It So Good

As Thanksgiving weekend fast approached every year, last-minute preparations are made for East's yearly event. Ribbons are hung, banners are painted, and the football players sweat while practicing in the cold weather. In one week, the efforts of the students involved in the annual project shine forth with school spirit, competition, and just pure fun on East's traditional Homecoming event. "It was really cool. You go in, sit on the bleachers, and the team starts playing the game. The marching band is playing, and at half-time, you see all the cool floats and the mascots," said Christine Parker ('99).

Besides the cheerleaders, athletes, and floats, one underlying aspect of Homecoming is the hard work that students put into the annual event. For many makers of the floats, it is fun to see their work paraded around the track. Other participants of Homecoming also enjoy the rewards of their efforts in making the event enjoyable for participants as well as spectators. As Cara Stein ('00) said, "I'm a Cougarette, and this year I practiced really hard, but I think all the hard work is worth it... It's fun to get the attention that people give me, and I'm really looking forward to a great experience this year." Thus, while Homecoming requires hard work and preparation for students who make the occasion an enjoyable event, the experience is well worth the effort.

Playing on foreign turf, East calls a timeout during the annual East-West Homecoming Game. The tradition dating back to the opening day of the school provides for a friendly match between rivals for the Homecoming of college freshmen. "I think it is one of our most important games of the season because it is for the bragging rights over who is better in Cherry Hill," said Jason Westoff ('99).

Jay Steinman ('99) and Brad Lafferty ('99) represent the junior class at the Homecoming Game. The tradition against West. Each year, students from each class are chosen to participate during the halftime show. Representatives take great pride in the job their individual classes have chosen them to fulfill. As Steinman said, "It is a great honor for me to represent my class because it feels good to represent all my friends."
Huddling together against the frigid cold, Lauren Adelman ('00) and Aloisia Greenberg ('99) sip coffee together while watching the homecoming game. The fact that the homecoming game is the last football game of the school year attracts a wide crowd, luring spectators to sit on the cold aluminum, benches in the brisk autumn air. "I enjoy going to the game because I like spending this final game with my friends."

The senior class gathers for a group shot in front of their winning float for this year's spirit week. "Panasenior." Despite the cold weather, spirit week brings students together to collaborate on a project in the name of school spirit and college freshmen returning home for Thanksgiving. "It's all about competition while having fun amongst the classes," said Lou D’Anella.

Withstanding the cold, Devon Segel ('98) and Justin Zaslav ('98) still manage to smile to the cheering crowd. Along with the spirit week floats, representatives also ride on the running track around the football field. Honoring select senior as well as other members of each class has been a longstanding tradition at East.

Marvin Alexander ('98) and Lauren Thurm ('99) take time out from upholding East's tradition of homecoming representative to smile for the camera. Each grade chooses a fellow student to represent their class at the homecoming game. As Thurm said, "It was an honor for Marvin to ask me to ride in the car (of homecoming rep)-I had a lot of fun."
Roaring Spirit

Crimson and white.

These colors are everywhere. Students look as if ready to go to war, with vivid red clothing and claw markings of white paint on their faces. Crimson and white streak the hair of many. It is a time of competition, a time of unity, a time of fun, and a time to show school spirit.

From the tricycle relays to the volleyball games, Spirit Week means the clash of classes. Home-rooms rack up points with morning quizzes. Class members man game booths during the lunch periods, seeing if they can get more kids to play than the other three classes.

There is more to Spirit Week than just fierce competitors squaring off on the Twister platform. This is the time that gives people an excuse to be together while showing their love for East. It reminds us that we are not only one class, but also one school. It’s a time for the classes to spend time with each other for the four short years of high school and to give back to the school a little of what it has given us. When the week ends, more than just a victory or a defeat has been gained. Memories and spirit have been gained. Just because the red gear comes off after a week doesn’t mean the spirit ends. The spirit, the Cougar Spirit, lives on.
• Jill Pestrucho ([98]) baby-sits Rashid Hawkins ([98]), suck it up to win the Spirit Week event of the milk drinking contest. Spirit Week is a time when East's student body emulates with school spirit. During events such as tug-of-war, students come together to support not only their class but also East. As Hawkins said, "The more events, the more spirit our school has."

• Matt Sipher ([98]) and Tim Witting ([98]) jam in the Dance Gym while auditioning for Battle of the Bands, a popular event amongst the student body during Spirit Week. The annual Battle of the Bands represents not only the student body's wide variety in musical taste, but also the enormous amount of talent present here at East. Moreover, the concert symbolizes the spirit of the students when joining together in recognition of their pride in East and what the school has given them.

• As the medley of East students from all grades gather in the fast-paced game of crab soccer, school spirit is displayed with the students' aggressive eagerness. The screaming cheers echoing throughout the gym voice the student's enthusiasm for the game, class, and most importantly, school.

• Striving to bring home the win for the senior class, Leigh Rubin ([98]) dances fervently to the very end of their class routine during the Dance Competition. What makes these students come to school during peak television hours and physically exert themselves in the cafeteria? "It's a good way to form lasting high school friendships and make bonds for the future," said Rubin.
Separate But Equal

Displaying one of the mannequins for sale at the school store, Felicia Judice ('99) and Marisa Halpern ('99) work together in selling school items to faculty and fellow students. Almost all of the items purchased at the school store promote the spirit of the Cougar. Thus, in a unique way, the school store unites students and teachers in supporting East as well as displaying school spirit.

As they examine a freshly created negative, Tracy Servo ('99) and Erica Boyle ('99) realize that they need each other's opinions to determine the best photos. Students rely on each other to help make decisions and lighten a work load. Moreover, collaborating on school projects creates a supportive environment conducive to acquiring success.

Summer

Government School, Perfect Ebbe, Annie Lai, Benjamin Lin, Sam Ruppers and Jennifer Heppenstall were recently offered an opportunity to attend Governor's School. Looking toward the summer experience as a learning experience, students look to develop their leadership qualities and academic knowledge. The summer experience emphasizes leadership qualities and academic knowledge. The summer experience emphasizes leadership qualities and academic knowledge. Through various courses, students learn how to lead and make decisions, thus preparing them for their future careers.

24 Student Life
Josh Kirschbaum ('98) and Stephanie Singer ('99) work together to complete the "Community Blood Drive" sign. In activities such as Blood Drive, students discover that pooling together individual qualities not only promotes achieving success, but also creates the best working environment. As Blood Drive worker, Dan Kancoff ('99) said, "The Blood Drive is a great cause because we help save so many people."

Tom LaMaina ('99) and Sheri Brooks ('99) exchange ideas as they collaborate in editing a petition letter for Amnesty International. To effectively work in pairs or even in groups, students have to be willing to give part of themselves up while maintaining individuality. As LaMaina said, "Sherrie and I each have our own tasks in Amnesty, but ultimately we must work together to get the club going and establish unity within it."

Scholars

Boy's State: Justin Brown, Chris D'Imperio, Samuel Davis, Brian Haughton, Kevin Haughton, Christopher Li. The primary goal of Boy's State is to have students leave with a greater understanding of the internal workings of state government. By also assisting in the leadership qualities from working in the work-life event of Boy's State, participants from high schools across the nation are encouraged to participate in a self-initiated environment. Overall, the conference is an experience to promote students' leadership capabilities as well as their plans for the future.

Rotary Conference: Sean Bae, Debbie Barr, Stephanie Fitts, Frankie Rush, Jessica Tanm, Renate Alm, Neil Verla, Erin Weaver, John Chung, Scott Kuo, Sarah Rooney, Michael Kirschen, Adam Weinman, Kristy Erickson. The summit between junior and senior years is an interdisciplinary with summer camp and SAT prep courses, but also participation in leadership conferences. For a selected few, the conference provides an environment where students can not only express their opinions but also learn from fellow students on how to strengthen leadership qualities.

Unity And Diversity
Diana Chung ('98), a grade level aide in the ninth and tenth grade office, offers an enormous amount of help to the secretary. By helping the faculty, Diana learns the importance of giving back to the school.

Jeffrey Su ('99), Tricia Kang ('99), and Eugene Tong ('98) enjoy a bit of intense concentration at the arcade. Asian Cultural Society provides many activities throughout the entire school year, inside and out of school. Participation in activities provides students with the opportunity not only to release stress through social events, but also the chance to meet fellow students with similar interests. Eugene Tong ('98) said, "Club events support unity within the club while also allowing students to be themselves and have fun."

MISSION:

From the Mime Company to Demogorgon to Football, there exists a "melting pot" of activities at East. The question does arise of why there are so many activities. One answer is that the abundance of activities presents an opportunity for every student to get involved and to have the experience of working with fellow students towards a common goal. Another reason is that the variety of activities presents students with the chance to meet new people and take on roles of leadership.

With the abundance of activities offered at East, one is likely to fall into the trap of taking on too much at once. However, students manage to juggle school and activities. As Steve Lu ('99), a veteran of clubs and sports, said, "The thing about doing lots of activities is that I don't usually go home on the normal 2:30 bus. This takes time out from my studies, but the clubs I participate in don't really affect my schoolwork a whole deal."

However, beneficial activities seem to also have a downside. Aviva Buchanan ('00) said, "I think that the clubs tend to be a really large group and the people only spend their time going to one activity. They really don't branch out to other activities. Sometimes the groups get too large to have a more personal relationship within the group." Another downside activities present to students is stress. However, many students have learned through the years how to cope with time restraints. "My many activities have taught me how to manage my time better, allowing me to not only focus on academics but also on my personal interests," explained Richard Chu ('97).

Discussing the African American Club's activities, Mrs. Foley, Pietta Dunmore (’99), Tanja Scarlett (’98), and Isaac Muns (’98) collaborate to work on upcoming events. This club works diligently to promote unity within all races.

Just by extending a helping hand, East aides help faculty achieve their mission. By working in grade level, Lisa Wong (’98) helps the East staff work to an end-efficiency.

COMMITMENT

Deborah Baer (‘98) rehearse her lines as she prepares for Cable 18, a show that airs Wednesday nights at 7:00. Due to the strict time schedule, students involved with Cable 18 have to give 100 percent, committing themselves to the success of each show. As Baer said, “We usually start taping on Mondays. Sometimes, I have to sacrifice my participation in other activities in order to stay on schedule for the broadcast.”

Instead of using the ten minutes during homeroom to finish up last night’s homework, Devon Glick ('98) and Wendy Manus ('98) sacrifice their time to broadcast the morning and afternoon announcements. In order to be involved in the activity, students have to be willing to take on all responsibilities that come with the job.

Brian Haughwout ('98) and Ari Butler ('99) attract onlookers as they discuss Latin during a Certamen meeting. Participating after school in activities such as Certamen lends to a learning experience and possible honors like the Senior Hall of Fame. Butler said, "Because Certamen is an academic activity, it takes more time than other ones."

After dedicating hours of hard work, Gerina Lindem ('99), Nikki Freedman ('99), and Abby Harvey ('99) finally get to participate in the long awaited Blood Drive. Commitment is an integral part of any student’s involvement in an activity, especially an activity such as Blood Drive. "I spent many hours working after school, but knowing that I was working for a good cause made it worth it," said Harvey.

One Step Ahead

Tired of South Park? Tired of Jerry Springer? Tired of the same old songs on the radio, the same old CD’s, the same old friends, even? No, wait! You don’t have to pierce your elbow or chop off all your hair, you just need a change of scenery! But what to do? Get a job? Nope, you won’t even need to bother with applications and tax forms ... just join a club at East! OK, so you won’t get paid, but you will be spending time doing something you like with people you like instead of spacing your life away in front of Nintendo 64.

Besides giving them a change of pace, many students believe that joining clubs in high school will prepare them for the future in more ways than one. While some clubs are more career-oriented than others, like newspaper staff, debate team and SGA, all co-curricular activities help students learn how to balance school activities, homework and a social life. Clubs also teach students how to deal with one another, because, as Braeden Baker (’98) put it, “When you get a job, you won’t be able to pick who you work with anymore, so you might as well start learning now.” Annie Lai (’98) offered another reason to get involved in clubs at East. “There’s more to school than just going to class,” she insisted. “High school is about getting the most that you can out of the four years you have to spend here, and clubs can do that for you.”

So get up off your couch and go find something to do! Clubs really can give you a head start on your future by teaching you time management and people skills and preparing you for the most of the best years of your life; but, seriously, all those clubs look really good on college applications ...

Members of the Chemistry II Science League team find time to laugh with their beloved advisor Mr. Siler. Advisors play a vital role in the success of not only clubs, but also academic teams by providing an environment in which to flourish. The morale of a team depends upon the environment provided by the advisor as well as the relationships an advisor has with fellow members. As Santhosh Vardhana ('99) said, "Mr. Siler is different from most teachers. Most teachers conform to their schedules, whereas Mr. Siler makes arrangements to meet his students' needs in order to make them better."

Beyond The Chalkboard

Clubs are made of its members, for sure. A club is only as good as its leadership, of course. There is one missing element in this formula, however: the club advisor.

"We need an advisor to do things for us that only adults can," said Jeff Su ('99), an officer of ACS. "Our advisor, Mr. Sharp, puts forth the effort to make our club the best we can for our members."

Advisors make those last-minute flyer copies. They arrange a room for that last-minute meeting, and sign the announcement form. They take care of permission forms during homeroom and bring the mustard to the pretzel sale after school. An advisor, however, is much more than this.

"Oindrilla Sardar ('90) said, "Our GLOBE advisor, Mr. Ehmert, makes sure that we are on track. As the president, I have a lot of responsibility for the club. Mr. Ehmert helps the officers accomplish our tasks for the club."

Advisors have the patience to deal with the business of the club. They lend a hand when an officer or member makes a mistake and in many cases, guide the club. Other times, they know when to just sit back and let the club progress on its own. They try to strike the perfect balance between moving the club forward and letting the officers lead it forward. They are a crucial link in the club chain.

Sharing their opinions on the weather, Emily Chen ('98), John Baek ('98), Robin Kim ('98), and Ms. Choi predict whether the gray clouds will release some welcome snow. For many teachers, the role as an educator extends beyond the classroom and into a more rewarding environment: extracurricular activities. Teachers who take up a second job as advisors for the abundance of activities at East find that even though the intellectual growth of students is a rewarding experience, seeing students come together as a whole to benefit the school or society is satisfying in that it provides security knowing that the world will be in good hands.

MOCK TRIAL:

NEW JERSEY SCIENCE LEAGUES:
With her eyes closed, Heather Feldman (’00), performs an experiment with the class to enhance the concept behind Peer Helpers—guiding others in need. Peer Helpers, one of many volunteer organizations at East, gives students the opportunity to reach out to other students.

Left Right Left! The ROTC members, Souman Samadder (’99), Rocco Leach (’99), Brad Belante (’00) Eli Goldstein (’99), and Nick Keller (’98) concentrate intently to march in perfect unison. To make it work, they need to focus not on themselves but on each other as a whole. This group mentality helps the Junior ROTC remain a strong program of cooperation and discipline.

Putting their heads together to figure out the way to help others, Rachel Gildner (’00), Allison Simpson (’98) and Mrs. Dobromilski focus on helping out their fellow students through East’s Peer Helper’s program. Through their mutual cooperation, the students ultimately benefit the community as well as themselves.

Quickly scanning their Respect for Drugs scripts, Rachel Weiss (’98), Debbie Barr (’98), and Kara Hawksley (’98) frantically memorize their last lines before they head out to the elementary schools. Students in Respect for Drugs gain an awareness of addiction while helping younger generations of the community realize the hazards of smoking. But to successfully get the message across, the TOPS members need to work together on the skills.
FEARLESS CHALLENGE: While Tom Lautman (99) attunes himself to his fellow Junior ROTC officers. Although his eyes focus straight ahead, he knows without looking that those around him have the same concentration. He and the members realize that they must cooperate in their drills to perfect their overall unity in ROTC.

ACROSS THE SPECTRUM

I'll make a bet with you. I'll bet you never thought of the fact that every student at East has something in common with every other student who has ever attended or ever will attend East. They have all heard that marvelous wonder of the oratory world - the buffet speech!!

Whether you heard it straight from Mr. Belchikoff's mouth or from a second-hand source, I'm willing to bet that at least once, you've heard the sentence, "East is a buffet." Metaphorically speaking, of course. Cheesy though it may sound, the truth cannot be denied. At East, there exists clubs for every interest under the sun.

Arin Brenner ('98), who has sampled quite a bit of East's menu, exclaimed, "Seriously, there are clubs for music, sports, academics, theatre, minorities, art, languages, writing, support groups ... should I keep going?" There are even clubs for activities you didn't know existed, and didn't know you liked. You know, those clubs that don't really have a category all to their own, or are not really clubs in the definitive sense, like FOP, Random Acts of Kindness, SADD, Respect for Drugs, and Friends of the Environment. Moreover, if none of the above puts a twinkle in your eye, you can start a club of your own! The "buffet" part represents the idea that students at East should not be content merely with ordering the veal, but should "fill their plates" with a wide variety of selections and keep coming back for seconds, thirds, even fourths. Not only does doing so get you up off the couch, but it also makes your high school experience more memorable, if not more fun.

CLASS OF '00 SGA REPS: Pamela Baskies, Jamie Beran, Thomas Caruso, Jennifer Chew, Brett Ciarelli, Magen Cohen, Kate Daly, Lara Dell'Omo, John Enny, Jay Joyce, Justin Kaplan, Jennifer Hur, Andrew Kim, Melanie Lowe, Peter Millili, Roma Pandya, Lauren Plasky, Timothy Roche, Andrew Rothman, Carolyn Synder, Meredith Sobie, Anna Starikovsky, Kim Vuong, Jessica Werner. Intent on the liberation of oppressed victims, Amnesty International president, Ralli Rom ('99), and vice-president, Susan Meuse ('98), prepare their petition letter before sending it out. Through acts such as this, members of the club feel the thrill of universal good will and humanity while learning the true meaning of freedom.

Putting up the symbolic chain of life, Jennie Sheinman ('99) leads her peers in the fight against alcohol abuse. "As a part of SADD, Students Against Drunk Driving, I hope to help students gain awareness about this prominent issue, and ultimately, lower the fatality rates," said Sheinman.

THE BEGINNING OF SOMETHING WONDERFUL

It is every inexperienced performer’s dream to have the lead role in a play, sing the solo in a concert, or play the Prelude in an orchestra. For many freshmen, however, the process of achieving that goal is often long and difficult. Many important lessons are learned throughout freshmen year such as overcoming the fear of appearing in one’s first performance, balancing rehearsals with schoolwork, and strengthening performance weaknesses.

Emily Saidel (’01), a first-year clarinetist, said, “I’m a little nervous about the upcoming concert because we’re still practicing.”

Saidel’s feelings are not unusual, however. Ari Haas (’01), a student in Vocal Workshop, said, “My first choral concert is coming up, and I’m kind of nervous because I’m trying to live up to what’s expected of an East Singer.”

Since many freshmen participants are new to the art, amateurism often plays a part. Ying Yin Dong (’01), a violinist for the orchestra, said that during seating auditions she was not as prepared as some of the upperclassmen veterans.

In activities such as a Lab Theater, students get a chance to see work that goes into a smaller production before they undertake a mainstage show. Ben Traster (’99) said, “Lab Theater is a great way for inexperienced actors to gain more stage time and confidence. It’s sort of a training period for the fall and spring shows.”

One important and positive lesson many students learn is that adjusting to the rigors of high school is easier when one is performing extra-curricularly. “It has helped me make friends faster because I meet so many people in D-wing as a result of my Vocal Workshop and band lessons. I think that this let me adjust to being a freshman faster,” said Saidel.

Most importantly, despite all of the lessons and benefits, being a performer brings one important thing. As Dong said, “I’m enjoying what I’m doing, so I’m happy.”

While singing “Spiral All Ye Faithful,” senior Ted DePriest (’98) and Ari Haas (’01) watch for Mr. Crouse’s cue. In Vocal Workshop as well as other “stepping stones” for those beginning a musical career at East, vocal leadership provides inspiration for freshmen to achieve their goals. Robin Bade (’99), a present member of Vocal Workshop, said, “Vocal Workshop gives aspiring singers a jump start towards the more prestigious choirs. In a more casual setting, we learn how to make harmony and the seniors help us to do that.”

FRESHMEN WIND ENSEMBLE: Lisa Alimnias, David Anderson, Lisa Buchalski, Carrie Chow, Joseph Cucinot, Sarah Daly, Scott Davies, Amanda Fabiano, David Firestein, Rebecca Gillespie, Jake Gohn, Amy Grayson, Alisha Greenberg, Arie Haas, Alanna Herman, Grace Kang, Melissa Kapadia, Melissa Kellner, Christopher Kewley, Hyo Son Kim, Jihoon Kim, William Klein, Vivek Kumar, Stephen Lamproun, Danny Lai, Benjamin Ruder, Emily Saidel, Sougata Samaddar, Aaron Satz, Kate Shaw, Rachel Scherman, Jeremy Volkon, Kevin Yang, David Zhou, Mr. Roy Hough (Conductor).
Grace Kang ('01) transforms notes on a page into a melody as the Freshmen Wind Ensemble shows what the future holds for East winds. This ensemble gives freshmen an opportunity to develop musical skills and to play with others who have the same passion for music.

Indicating the joy singing brings to her heart, Maxine Steuart ('99) leads less experienced Vocal Workshop members during "The Handsome Butcher." For students possessing dreams of musical success at East, the Winter Concert is their first experience towards attaining their goals. Rosa Wu ('98), a current East Singer and Madrigal remembered, "Before attending East, I never sang. Vocal Workshop exposed me to an area of music that I can't imagine living without now."

Getting ready for the start of the show, Kim Vuong ('00) carefully applies the makeup for her part in this year's Lab Theatre production, Gigi. The Theatre provides a theatrical foundation for understand on many areas besides acting, such as knowing how to put on makeup for a show. As Vuong said, "This was my first experience speaking lines on stage, but I overcame that and had a lot of fun doing it."

Alice Greenberg ('01) along with Joe Cucinotis ('01) follow Mr. Hough's baton throughout "Sleigh Ride," one of the pieces performed by the Freshmen Wind Ensemble at the Winter Band Concert. Freshmen Wind Ensemble serves not only as an environment conducive to exhibiting one's talent for music, but also as a surrounding to reveal one's musical skills.

Similar to Casual Harmony, the Madrigals have to do a considerable amount of acting during performances. The members’ acting, however, consists primarily of expressions, which is difficult to accomplish while the need to concentrate on singing is prevalent. In order to attain this feat, the Madrigals spend many hours after school on rehearsal. As Madrigal Rosa Wu (’99) said, “Our rehearsal time is not only used for the singing but also the acting because our expressions need to match the connotation of our words.”

Where does the talent stop? Casual Harmony, known for its melodious singing voices. However, little does the student body know about the group’s acting talent as well. Nonetheless, for the members of Casual Harmony, acting as well as singing equates to double overtime practice wise. Fortunately, the members, like all members involved in the performing arts, are willing to put in the effort.

CASUAL HARMONY: Jonathan Adler, Meson Banas, Michael Benn, Robin Bose, Ari Butler, John Chung, Ted DePrince, Eric Gramatges, Adam Hornback, Ben Schwartz, Ben Traster, Adam Weiner, Jae Won, Mr. John Crever (Adviser).

MADRIGAL SINGERS: Michael Benn, Ari Butler, Jane Cabalo, Erica Geller, Debbie Ghosh, Sarah Goldenthal, Lauren Luchman, Alissa Palladini, Jenna Panaspacker, Matt Polonsky, Ben Schwartz, Matt Soffer, Rosa Wu, Mrs. Laurie Bindel (Adviser).

BELLES OF EAST: Debbie Barr, Anne Cohen, Erika Ettin, Cindy Greenberg, Jaime Lawton, Elizabeth Livingston, Beth Miller, Elysia Palma, Courtney Rader, Ilana Silbert, Jenna Silverstein, Rachel Singer, Maxine Stewart, Erin Weaver, Mrs. Laurie Bindel (Adviser).

Playing the song for the millionth time, Katie Bleaken (’99) performs “Battle Hymn of the Republic” at the annual Winter Concert. From after practicing hard, the group’s success of the performance is not assured. For the overall piece that Celebrations performs becomes a masterpiece composed of each individual’s effort. “The performance depends on everyone’s effort. If one person does not perform their best, it reflects on the whole group,” said Belprreet Bhogal (’00).

To Dave Castagner (’98), the band’s motto “Take a BIG breath” comes without hesitation. Since musicians practice their pieces numerous times during rehearsals, thinking about when to stop, start, or breathe becomes subconscious effort. Thus, the musician is left to enjoy the music, to feel the music while playing the notes on concert night. This “epiphany” is reached only after long hours of hard work are put into playing the piece.

CELEBRATIONS: Meson Banas, Belprreet Bhogal, Katie Bleaken, Abby Chan, Saritha Dorado, Christina Kim, Erica Rosenfeld, Shana Smulyan, Julie Warshawker, Lisa Wong, Jia Yoon, Mrs. Laurie Bindel (Adviser).
Harmony In D-Wing

All work and little or no play seems like a very boring way to spend a week. However, for many students involved in the performing arts, that is exactly what many of them commit themselves to. Why?

Dedication to a performing arts activity requires a lot of time and effort on behalf of every participant. For many actors, singers, and musicians, the motto is "practice makes perfect." To achieve the pinnacle of effortlessly playing a Beethoven piece from memory requires practice - and more - if one desires to play the piece excellently.

Part of being an accomplished performer is one's ability to take time out of a hectic school schedule and work on a song, monologue or piece of music. Not everyone enjoys rehearsing into the wee hours of the night, but most of them agree on one thing. As Kaushik Ganguly ('99) said, "I don't enjoy practicing, but in order for you to get better, you have to practice. I like to play the viola, so that's why I practice."

Many students practice to attain a certain goal. For some, it is getting the lead in the next show. They dream of making it to the first chair of a section. No matter what the goal, one thing is simple. Practice plays a critical part in achieving that success.

Adam Hornback ('98) and Alissa Palladini ('98) rehearse lines for the characters John and Elizabeth. Producer for this year's Actors Studio production in the Auditorium. As with all shows, the Auditorium is frequently used by the actors to give them a sense of what the real performance will be like. Palladini said, "The actor becomes familiar with adjustments needed for the larger facility such as projection, larger gestures, and more exaggerated facial expressions."

During a weekly Monday rehearsal with the rest of the Belles, Jamie Lawton ('98) and Courtney Rader ('99) practice funnily in order to thrive for a perfected performance. Even though these rehearsals are demanding, the time and effort pays off when the reward is a "Blowout" for the Belles on concert night. "What you do in rehearsal, you will do in a performance. If we are extensive when we practice, we will play perfected pieces in concert," said Elizabeth Livingston ('99).

Blood, Sweat, And Tears

One sees them in the halls almost everyday. They are the performers who mingle in the D-wing hallway. As the various actors, singers, and band members joke around the halls, one may wonder just how such diverse personalities with a common interest manage to work together so well.

It is well-known that a successful concert requires the cooperation of all of its instrumentalists, but what really goes to create that special bond between the members after rehearsals? The answer is simple. The friendships forged through the group continue beyond the activity itself. For Oindrila Sardar ('00), her involvement in orchestra helped her to know people she normally wouldn't have met. "Being in orchestra definitely benefits you. It's neat to know different types of people who are the same as you in their activity, but different from you personality-wise."

"Working with others who I'm friends with helps. I think that when we know the other members of orchestra we perform a lot better just because we get along well," said violinist Christina Yin ('00). Thus, in the end, working with one's friend makes even the most daunting of rehearsals a little easier.
As David Cohen ('00), Daniel Berg ('00), Jerry Levine ('99), and Alvin Dorado ('00) sing for Concert Choir, they appreciate the pleasure music brings to their life. By working together, they as well as other members of Concert Choir form friendships that will most likely last a lifetime. Christine Chen ('98), one of these members, said, "Since we see each other almost every day and have to work so closely together, we form strong bonds with one another."

Rebecca Halpern ('91) and Amanda Scara ('91) strike one of their Mime poses responsible for displaying friendship via art. As with many students who participate in the performing arts, they find that in spite of the scintillating minutes they see each other during the school day, there is enough time to develop a true friendship, a rewarding consequence of working together co-curricularly. "Sometimes it seems that when the make-up goes on, the walls go down," said Julie Berger ('99).

While practicing "Ol' Dan Tucker" for Concert Choir, Lindsay Schwartz ('98), Sara Chvala ('99), and Julie Warschauer ('99) peel their thoughts into creating musical harmony. The cooperation necessary to create music engulfs a tacit bond which, in most circumstances, later blossoms into friendship. "Wrong notes don't get in the way; we all try to have fun and help each other as much as possible," said Sarah Plimpton ('99).
The subtle variations of pensive blues and passionate reds help to set the mood of the shows put on by the drama department. In determining which lighting compliments a particular scene, the lighting designer, Kris Capella ('99), uses his ability to make sound judgement calls in creating the perfect ambience. "Because lighting has the greatest effect on a certain scene, color, intensity, and the source of light must all be carefully considered," said Capella.

In order to fully express her innate musical abilities, Elsa Palma ('98) participates in as many activities as she can in the performing arts. In addition to taking East Singers and theater classes during school hours, she is an active member of extracurricular events such as Marching Band, Belles, and East drama productions earning her a spot in P.A.V.A.S. (Performing and Visual Arts Society). Students who are similar to Palma realize that they possess a talent in the field of music and do everything they can to make the utmost of it.

Making It Happen

One usually doesn't notice them, but they are there. These "invisible people" are part of an important group of students at East, a group that makes events such as the Spring Musical and Winter Concert occur flawlessly. Some members of the Stage Crew, for example, work backstage to ensure that the lights will be at just the right hue for an important scene in the play. In addition, students who perform in the Pit Orchestra are hidden from the audience's view during the play, but are nevertheless indispensable to the musical since they supply the score.

Christine Parker ('99), a Stage Crew member, said, "There are always the lighting technicians, sound people, stage managers, and carpenters. They all put a lot into the show, even though they are not seen onstage by the audience." Parker said that oftentimes, these same students who put so much time and effort into the show are sometimes overlooked in the grand scheme of things. "It is hard to get used to the fact that all the praise is placed on the actors. People seem to forget about the techies. I mean, without our input, there wouldn't be a show."

Like other members of the Stage Crew, Parker loves working hard behind the scenes despite the lack of recognition from theater patrons. As she said, "I totally enjoy doing what I do behind the scenes; and, during Hell Week, every hour I lose from sleep to crew work is worth it." Another "invisible" participant, Pit Orchestra violist Kauhik Ganguly ('99), said, "We practice with the cast for about four hours each day. We do a lot of time into it. I like the music to 'South Pacific', and I enjoy playing the viola. In the end, I think it's definitely worth the effort."

Kevin Haughwout ('98) prepares the set for the annual East extravaganza, the spring musical. As Assistant Technical Director, one of his responsibilities is making sure all the wiring and lighting run smoothly during the play. However, this enormous task is too big for one man to handle. Only with the help of the hardworking stage crew can the play go on. One of the members of the crew, Bryan Bann ('99), said, "It takes a tremendous amount of hard work and effort from every single member to make sure that everything goes well during the performance."

It's Showtime!

All performers look forward to The Big Night. For, that is when they get to show all the hours of hard work they put into rehearsal. However, another factor as The Big Night approaches is nerves. Despite all of the hard work that one may put into the piece, one still gets nervous about, for example, performing the solo in front of a huge audience at Carnegie Hall or even at our own East cafeteria. Ying Ying Dong ('01), a violinist for Orchestra, said, "I was kind of nervous for my first concert at East because, obviously, I didn't want to mess up or anything. I guess the fact that during some of our rehearsals, there were some mistakes made, made me kind of edgy. Still, I wasn't nervous to the point of freaking out." As any seasoned performer will tell you, this typical case of nerves is normal. The goal for performers is to conquer nervousness during the actual performance.

Naturally, then, after a concert experience like Carnegie Hall, Orchestra members feel a lot better than when they were waiting in the wings. Violinist Kaushik Ganguly ('99) said, "The entire experience of actually playing ONSTAGE at Carnegie Hall was just amazing. The whole time we were up there, it was so awesome. We performed really well, too. It was just a really cool experience." Other students are perfectly content with East's own stage, especially after the performance. As actor and singer Ari Butler ('99) said, "There's nothing like it after the show. I mean, at the end, when everyone's giving their bows, you just get the most incredible feeling of accomplishment and pride."

With the energy of real rock star boys, Adam Hornback ('98), Ari Butler ('99), Don Reed ('99), Adam Weins ('98), and Ben Gutin ('98) perfectly characterize the mischief of the "Geek Officer Krupke" antics from "West Side Story." In order for actors to fulfill their parts successfully, they have to assume their characters emotionally and physically. Butler said, "This scene is the best guy scene to play in all of theater because it is so fun to become these characters."

On Opening Night, Michael Benn ('98) and Courtney Rader ('89), in the roles of Orson Welles and Nellie Forish, gave the first of the musical's vaudeville performances. This night follows what members of the East drama department call "Hell Week." During the last couple of days before opening night, the cast, crew, and orchestra are still at school when many other East students have already gone to bed. However, leaving school at 11:00 PM pays off in the end when the play is a success. As Benn said, "Nothing in life fulfills me like a performance."

"The rain in Spain falls mainly on the plain," sings Sarah Goldenthal ('99) to fellow actor Howard Megdal ('98) in the musical version of "My Fair Lady." This musical's straight dialogue is difficult for some actors, they generally find music easier to perform because of the song-dominated format. Goldenthal said, "Songs are not only great memorization techniques but are also very entertaining to the audience."

Adam Weiner ('98) and Erin Weaver ('98) embrace while singing "Some Enchanted Evening" together against the backdrop of a palm tree in a South Pacific Island. Students participating in the drama productions form lifelong friendships in addition to attaining valuable acting experience. "We work as a team," said Weiner and Weaver. "As this is our last show at East, we have done all we can to make this one special."

Performing in "The Will Rogers Follies" for the fall show "Broadway Musicals: The First 100 Years", East's featured dancers strike their final pose as they wait for the applause to stop. Although these dancers, as well as other entertainers, may get "opening-night jitters", the audience can hardly fail to be inspired by the high level of talent that the performers have. Anne Cohen ('99), one of the dancers, said, "This number required so much practice and concentration that the relief I felt after we had finished is incomparable."

The small groups of O-ring, Mime Company, Belles of East, Madrigals, and Casual Harmony, all perform outside of school in addition to their regular seasonal concerts. The small groups schedule as many events as they can in an attempt to exhibit their unique talents to a public audience. Hospitals, nursing homes, elementary schools, private businesses, and even shops in historic Haddonfield send in requests for performances to the music directors.

The variety of styles of entertainment that East offers always makes for an interesting show. The Mime Company especially caters to the small children of the elementary schools while the Madrigals' and Belles' more serious tone is perfect for caroling and dignified concerts. Casual Harmony is the most versatile group with their improvisational and comical presentation, which suits many occasions.

However, the enjoyment members of the small groups receive from these out-of-school concerts goes far beyond a mere love of performing. "I get a lot of satisfaction out of performing outside of school," said Courtney Rader (98). "It gives me such a warm feeling in my heart to know that we are making a difference. That someone out there feels a little bit happier because of us." The small groups are especially busy during the winter holiday season, and are usually more than happy to provide entertainment to those who want it, but might not be able to venture out to East to see it.

Michael Benn (98) explained, "Sometimes there are people who are unable to come to East to see us, like those in the hospitals and nursing homes, so we can bring our entertainment to them."

Strange, that people say teenagers can't really make a difference. But when a child's face lights up or an elderly lady starts to clasp in time to the music, then we know that it's not true...we've made all the difference in the world to them. The small groups exist to entertain, to make people smile and laugh. That's what they do, that goal has been accomplished. Likewise, we carry this experience of accomplishment after we leave high school and enter the real world, where we can use our experience to help us in our future endeavors.

With the bow set gently across the strings, Netanel Elazar (98) scrutinizes the notes on her music sheet, bringing to life the melodious tones of the cello. This is the performance, the culmination of months of hard work and toil over the wooden string instrument. Here lies the satisfying high point—bringing the music to the world.

Arm curved under the violin, Rosa Wu (99) keeps her eyes on the music stand set before her. The violin emulates the harmonious sounds which complement the rest of the orchestra in "Beethoven's 5th Sona-tery." Members of orchestra practice their instruments daily to perfect this symphony of music in order to make the performance enjoyable, not only for themselves, but also for the audience. As Wu said, "Whether I'm singing or playing the violin, I get a great feeling of satisfaction when I see just one person enjoying the performance."

East Singers, Wind Ensemble, Orchestra 57
Bringing It UP A Notch

What does it take? That seems to be the big question as performing arts students prepare for auditions in everything from All Eastern Chorus to a spot in Governor's School for the Arts. Every year, hopeful musicians, singers, actors, and dancers practice to earn a place in an elite performing arts group of their choice. Some people believe that pure genius accounts to why some people are talented but who just don't put forth the work to get it there. Niogi, who made Philadelphia Youth Orchestra his freshman year, said that his motivation has helped him get through some tough rehearsals. "I just love playing the cello. I can continue on because of my love for the instrument."

Similarly, in the case of Mason Banas (‘98), a French horn virtuoso who attended Governor's School for his musical talent, hard work and skill fused together to produce a brilliant performer. As Banas said, "I believe success is a combination of lots of hard work and also some talent. Working hard is a major part of it because only then can you use your talent to its fullest capacity. East's teachers have really helped me develop my skills with the French horn and singing." Banas also reiterated how motivation gives people an extra edge in what they are doing. "My own personal motivations help me express my emotions through my music better, and also get me to practice more."

Motivation has directed some of the most musically talented students at East towards obtaining awards of the highest excellence. One example is the Governor's Award. The award recognizes students through the prestigious All-State Chorus, a group that is composed of the most vocally advanced students. Lauren Luchtman (‘94), a significant contributor to East's music department, was the first ever from East to win this award and the only one from the South Jersey region recognized for this honor. Niogi, Banas, and Luchtman are but a few of the students at East who have worked their way to the top through practice and talent. They are not alone in their pursuit of excellence.

With the intense concentration characteristic of a violin, all-State Chorus member Nadya Niogi totally immerses herself in the music. A number of the school's top musicians have excelled in the regional and state level of a band, choir, or orchestra, illustrating the high standard of achievement existing in East's music department. Tan said, "Playing with the best instrumentalists of the region and the state has furthered my experience in orchestral playing."

The combination of Brass Ensemble and Orchestra requires a commitment few people can handle. Fortunately, students like trumpet players Kevin Akinskas (‘98) and Dave Wolbach (‘00) have accomplished this feat by skillfully balancing their schoolwork and extracurriculars. "Although these musical activities take up much of our free time, they are totally worth it because they greatly enhance our musical abilities and are also very enjoyable," said Akinskas.

BRASS ENSEMBLE: Kevin Akinskas, Mason Banas, Adam Fensch, Karl Sukhia, David Wolbach, Mr. Bruce Yurko (Adviser).

For most students, one instrument is enough. However, Ben Abo ('99), who plays a variety of instruments, is known throughout East as a keyboard and percussion specialist. Like Abo, other students also enjoy learning new instruments, but sticking to them requires a huge undertaking, considering the demands of schoolwork and other activities. However, Abo said, “I plan on keeping all of my instruments and becoming better and better through time.”

While practicing for Chamber Orchestra, Crystal Wu ('00) plucks her strings with undaunted concentration. A common goal amongst many individuals in the music department is to not only succeed, but to exceed beyond expectations. In order to achieve this state of excellence, they practice at home in addition to school rehearsals. “Having the chance to play in prestigious groups such as the Chamber Orchestra pushes me to practice even more,” said Wu.

Susan Meuse ('98), a cellist in South Jersey, All-State, East, and Garden State Pops Orchestra, focuses all of her energy towards her playing. As instrumentalists become more advanced, they realize that East and other organizations in the area offer many possibilities for young musicians. As Meuse said, “Because I love playing the cello, I try to take advantage of every opportunity that comes my way.”

Under the direction of Mr. Hough, Dave Castagner ('98) and Owen Hoxie ('00) strum jazz chords on their guitars. On one level, instructors teach the students the basic fundamentals in a particular area. However, more importantly, they also encourage the students to help them become better musicians. “The music teachers at East are not only the most able teachers I know, but they also make learning about music fun.” said Castagner.

CHAMBER GROUPS: ORCHESTRA: David Castagner, Julian Chang, Peter Chang, Ruby Chang, Rina Cho, Netanel Eliezer, Kaushik Ganguly, Kristina Kasinskas, Andrew Kim, Jane Kim, Christina Liao, Arnold Luk, Susan Meuse, Jen Moon, Sumit Nioog, Kathy Tan, Jeff Wang, Crystal Wu, Rosa Wu, Christine Yin, WINDS, Mxon Banas, Hannah Byun, Richard Chu, Chris D’Imperio, Susan Meuse, Mr. Bruce Yurko (Conductor).

In a display of showmanship, the drummers pop their snare upward while Ben Abo ('99) leads the section into the beat of the music. Percussionists are considered to be a vital part of the marching band. By keeping the pulse, they keep the energy within the rhythm of the music.

Glancing calmly over the band, Drum Major Kevin Akinskas ('98) prepares himself for another performance. His hands are poised in the air as the band waits for the gloves to slice through the air, marking the beginning of another show on the road.

With a ring in each hand, Tiffany Carter ('99) and her fellow Cougarettes continue to perform the carefully choreographed moves of their routine. On the road, routines similar to these provide spirit vital to the support of the football team. "I like being a cougarette because I like to dance and it lets me be there to cheer on the football team," said Carter.

MARCHING BAND: Ben Abo, Kevin Akinskas (Drum Major), Lisa Akinskas, Dave Anderson, Jackie Bell, Dan Berg, Jordan Berg, Evan Blau, Rottie Bleiker, Sarah Bleckner, Craig Bromberg, Lila Buchalski, Hannah Byun, Terri Carter, Richard Chu, Dave Castagner, Sarah Daly, Daniel DiFlavis (Asst. Drum Major), Chris D'Imperio, Adam Fensh, Jason Fensh, Amanda Fiamone, David Firestein, Dizy Gillespie, Rebecca Gillespie, Michael Groen, Philip Hausler, Melissa Kapadia, Anthony Kasinskas, Kristina Kasinskas, Becky Kaufman, Billy Klein, Jonathan Li, Susan Meuse (Asst. Drum Major), Robert Natelson, Leigha Plimpton, Sarah Plimpton, Abbi Sharonsky, Jared Shavelson, Karl Sukhia, Andrew Thompson, Lauren Tyka, Josh Vareen, Jeremy Volkman, David Wolkach, COUGarettes: Tiffany Carter, Rachel Cetel, Sara Chvala, Alyssa Coaanger, Rebecca Elias, Renee Gelber, Marti Gorden, Shira Moldoff, Elsia Pulna (Captain), Lauren Schlanger, Lindsay Schwartz (Captain), Cara Stein, COLOR GUARD: Lauren Adelman, Sherri Brooks, Ishih Chung, Trish Devine, Diana Durrettberger, Alisha Greenberg, Lisa Greenwald, Aislinn Hennessey, Diana Kuo, Anne Lunesfeld, Danni Mac, Stephanie Menes, Brooke Newman, Erica Rosenfeld (Captain), Emily Saidel, Jenna Silverstein (Captain), Shana Smailyan, MANAGERS: Leigh Garrett, Scott Hyden, Owen Hoxie, Gina Lamanowicz, Eileen Shubach, Mia Sorrenton, Heather Tomar, Mr. Carmen Grasso (Director), Mr. Bruce Yurko (Conductor), Mrs. Mary Beth Quinlan (Cougarettes), Mrs. Donna Rogers (Colorguard).
On The Road Again ...

For many performing-arts groups here at East, traveling to different places is an annual, monthly, or even weekly occurrence.

For example, during a typical concert outside of school, the Madrigals, a small vocal ensemble, perform old songs as well as new ones in order to entertain the audience. A concert was recently held at the Garden State Park Pavilion. Ben Schwartz ('99), a member of "Mads," describes that event as "one of the really fantastic events we did .... The experience was great and we sounded good."

This year the Marching Band has also traveled extensively. Besides performing at all of the varsity East football games, the members also travel to other parts of New Jersey and elsewhere to show off their talents. To accomplish this goal, the band has to put hard work and lots of practice into each and every performance. Sara Chvala ('99), a Cougarette and Marching Band member, said, "Before school starts, we have to go to Band Camp, where we learn all our routines. We stay there for a week and practice from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Then, during football season, we practice three days a week. We stop practice until the spring, when the people who are going on the music trip have to start learning their routines again."

Chvala also said that all of the hard work usually shows through during the performances, which are always enjoyable experiences. A special trip for her was during her freshman year. "We traveled to Disney World to perform in the parade on Main Street and MGM Studios .... It was really fun hanging out with my friends there. It was a cool experience for me," she remembers.

Schwartz and Chvala prove that, sometimes, the added incentive of an upcoming show on the road helps to motivate performers to do their best and have fun at the same time.

With his trumpet erect, Dave Wolbach ('00) leads a train of wind instruments. Besides marching and playing an instrument at the same time, marching band members must know their routine, especially on "foreign land." As Richard Chu ('99) said, "Every time we go to a different school, we have to quickly adjust to the new field. Thus, we have to know our routine inside and out."

Flag raised above her head, Lisa Greenwald ('99) gazes wondrously while absorbing the music and colorful display of the marching band. Practicing for such moments, band members must know the movements by heart. This is especially crucial when traveling on the road.
Spirit Week ... uh wasn't that Green and Gold wars? Since spirit week is the first time that the freshmen come together in school spirit, they have to work together to put a formidable front up against the other classes. Be it booth building where they need the help of the upperclassmen, or dance routines, there are many new events adding to the usual physical activities. Most of the time the inexperienced freshmen come in last place, but once in a while they pull off an upset and place higher than fourth. For the "Frosh," spirit is well represented in numbers. By supporting their peers, the freshman class displays their pride in the cougar as well as heralding a hearty 'well-come home' for college freshmen. "The football game was great because everyone really showed their spirit for East," said Emily Saidel (01).

The Freshman Myth

It’s the typical high school scenario: a seven-foot tall varsity wrestler spots a vertically challenged, lost freshman and boom! Before the onlookers know it, there is a small dent in one of the lockers. However, the question remains: do freshmen get abused, or is this just some kind of conspiracy to humble the ‘lowly’ students?

The majority of the freshmen class rarely, if ever, sees or are victims of such manifest torture. Rather, the popular story of hallway abuse committed by upperclassmen upon their subordinates is false. As proof of this interesting yet false belief, Ying Ying Dong (‘01) said, “Freshmen being abused in the halls? It’s all a myth! I have not seen one freshman being rammed into a locker or anything like that at all. I think that the upperclassmen are more mature than doing that kind of stuff.”

Further explanation by the ‘more mature’ sophomores, juniors, and seniors also indicate that the abuse is virtually nonexistent. As Peter Lembesis (‘99) said, “I think that every once in a while, guys will bully around freshmen that they know, in a joking sense.... But it’s not a serious, every day type of thing.”

In fact, a strange twist to the story reveals that sometimes, the opposite happens. For example, Lembesis recalled that while a freshman, HE bullied others around. The important fact to remember, though, is that the issue of ‘freshman abuse’ is just an exaggerated myth at best.
Part of adjusting to high school life as a freshman includes becoming acquainted with the underclassmen. Bill Magee ('01) kicks off his friendship with Elizabeth Livingston ('99) by inquiring about the difficulty of her Pre-calc class.

Natalie Gleimier ('01) and Ian Richmons ('01) take a break during gym in order to catch up with the latest news. During freshmen year, all students must take mandatory classes, such as weight-training, for physical education. “Gym is a convenient break from the hectic school day to not only exercise but also hand out with friends,” said Laurel Budman ('01).
High School. It sounded so grown-up back in middle school, but as the huge building, the building that will be called 'home' for the next four years, suddenly comes into view through the dingy windows of the school bus, even the most confident of freshmen can feel a twinge of uncertainty. Not only is the size of the building intimidating at first, but also the concept of 'lab days' makes about as much sense as cryptography, all of the hallways look alike, and there are new faces around every corner. On top of this, the vast "buffet" of activities, sports, and clubs that freshmen constantly hear about is enough to make even a seemingly well-rounded freshman’s head spin.

Choosing which activities to take advantage of can be difficult, as many freshmen soon find out. Even so, Lauren Tyska ('01) found that "the best part about East is that there’s something for everyone, no matter what you’re interested in." Our advice is to take it from a "Mission: Impossible" perspective, minus the "Impossible" part. As freshmen, your mission, should you choose to accept it, is to find your place in the vast ocean that is Cherry Hill East, and learn to balance activities, clubs, classes, tests, labs... oh, and a social life. For some it will come easily, and for others, it just might take all four years. However overwhelming the mission may seem, just remember one thing: what you accomplish in high school and the experiences you take forth into the world after graduation will only benefit you in the future. Good deal, don’t you think?

Up, down, up, down. Freshmen live through their first ordeals of... gym. Even after freshmen experience the ups and downs of a new school, they are "required" to endure a rigorous step aerobics class. "When I came to high school, I never dreamed of having to take a step aerobics class. On top of that, I don’t know how they can play those cowboy songs for a step aerobics class," said Katie Kim ('01)
The Sophomore Storm Breaks

Freshman year, like the calm before a storm, is very deceiving. While the frosh are happily enjoying East's "buffet", teachers are plotting another sophomore year filled with tornadoes of projects and a downpour of homework. As sophomores, students have more responsibilities and engagements in addition to increased school work. To pass through this surging tidal wave, sophomores learn new ways of cramming, falling and succeeding. Some learn not to sleep and study for hours while others learn to cram in infinitesimally small amounts of time. Not everything worsens though; some things, such as getting through C wing intersection, become easier. Even stressing out becomes easier. Many sophomores learn to be less anxious about things and deal with new and difficult situations with more equanimity. Whatever the experience is during sophomore year, the "wise fools" learn how to deal with such storms.

Sophomores take a break from trying to accomplish the impossible feat of tenth grade: completing all the work. There is no doubt in any sophomore's mind that freshman year seems like a walk in the park when compared to the shock of tenth grade. Often times, the transition from freshman to sophomore year is something of a challenge that is never overcome. "The transition is extremely harsh. It's like jumping from one side of the Grand Canyon to the other. Freshman year is such a different work atmosphere. Obviously, the classes get harder and the workload increases. The actual transition for me was emotional in that I evolved more self-confidence," said Annie Shing ('00).

Walking In A Winter Wonderland

It's coming ... February 29th ... girls in dresses, guys in suits, flowers, music, rings ... no, it's not the prom, it's the next best thing! The most anticipated event of the entire year for the Class of 2000 ... the Sophomore Cotillion! Sure, it's held in the cafeteria, but in the end, the good points of the night outweigh the bad points. SGA works all year to make this one of the best nights by finding a great DJ, deciding on a theme, decorations, and a photographer to immortalize the entire event. Sophomores who ordered class rings finally receive them, and then enjoy the traditional ring turning. Members of this year's class have their work cut out for them ... they have to find 100 people to turn their rings in order to ensure good luck for the years to come! "I've never looked forward to an event as much as I'm looking forward to the Cotillion," raves Andrew Keller ('00). "It's the night that the whole year has been building towards."

Jen Kim ('00), Jenny Chang ('00), Vicky Chou ('00), and Christina Liao ('00) pose with their dates before hitting the dance floor at the Sophomore Cotillion. Even though the dance is held in the school cafeteria, the environment provided by the decorations, music, and energy of the students is more than enough to create memories for an evening to remember. As Chou said, "We didn't decide to go to the Cotillion until two days before; but, I'm extremely happy I did because it was a memorable occasion."
PRIVILEGE, NOT A RIGHT

The most important class of sophomore year. It’s not chemistry, not English, not even cooking ---- it’s driver’s education.

For nowhere else can a student take in the sights of car collisions, mangled bodies, and stoplights hastily scribbled on a blackboard. In driver’s education, not only does one exercise the mind, but the highlighter as well. Only here can a sophomore ponder the eternal question: what exactly IS a moped?

After weeks of closely studying the laws of the road, dried-out highlighters, and pages upon pages of scribbled notes decorated with doodles, one finally arrives at the moment of truth: the written exam. Pass or fail: 80%. Are you up to the challenge?

Hye Jin Kim ('99) helps Sarah Cho ('00) prepare for one of the most important classes of their sophomore year: Driver’s Education. This class prepares students for their written test, of which they must pass in order to get their license. Although the class is not important academically, it is significant when utilizing the information learned in real life situations.

STRESSING ABOUT STANDARDIZED TESTS

Innocence lost. Newly upperclassmen, juniors must deal with the looming question about their future. Before that question is even asked, however, a more pressing and stressing issue rears its head: standardized testing.

PSAT's SAT's, ACT's, and Achievements ... all must be dealt with in addition to regular school tests. Juniors are told that these exams test “aptitude” and “can’t be studied for.” That doesn’t stop hundreds of juniors every year from buying study guides, taking courses, and even hiring tutors to help them field the rough waters of the College Boards.

Richard Chu ('99) said, “I have to take all these tests to decide my future, even though I don’t know what that’s going to be. I feel a lot of pressure because these tests will make a big impact on what happens to me later on.”

Hopefully, juniors won’t get too stressed out, to concentrate on grades which are more important than standardized test scores, and to just enjoy their junior year. Remember: senior year is just around the bend! Take the time now to have a little fun.

ARGHHHHHHHH!!! With intense focus, Ben Abo ('99), Elon Elisha ('99), and Jeremy Schaefer ('99) valiantly manage to concentrate on learning new vocabulary for the upcoming SAT’s. When mentioned, “SAT’s” is the one word that brings fear, stress, as well as anxiety to the mind of any upperclassman. The main reason why the standardized test harbors such ill feelings with students is because the test counts so heavily in the college application process. “I took the SAT’s early to get them out of the way. Taking them early puts less stress upon you due to the fact that you can concentrate on academic work as well as the college application process,” said Sharon Huang ('99).

THE PRESSURE'S ON!

Even though junior year symbolizes one of the most troublesome barriers students must overcome in high school, the time allows students to mature as the preparation for college begins. "This year, I have placed the greatest load upon my shoulders than for any other year. Nevertheless, as the year progresses, I have gained more confidence in myself than ever before," said Vilienia Palamalvil ('99). Many juniors experience the rigorous course work of the abundant AP and Honors classes offered. "I feel that East's courses require a lot of time and effort, but I also feel that it is definitely worth the effort," said Danny Choi ('99).

Combined with the difficulty of high level courses, juniors must deal with the looming presence of SAT's, SAT II's, and AP exams. Standardized tests, a key element of the college application, pushes juniors to assiduously work in attaining competitive scores. As Jeff Su ('99) said, "SAT's are extremely important for my future. Therefore, I take them very seriously."

Ultimately, junior year is an overall difficult period of time for students attending high school. Fortunately, once students overcome this barrier, the opportunities laid out before them are well worth the effort.

Kate Daly ('99) rests her back against the auditorium doors as she and her friends work in a study group after school. Many people find that studying in a group is more effective than studying alone. The primary reason for this is that the social interaction helps reduce the rigor and stress of solitary studying.
Masters Of Procrastination

Jeffrey Su ('99)
Adam Shapiro ('99)
Peter Klimas ('99)

“Yeah, I don’t do it anymore.”
“I’ll do it later.”
“I was going to be a professional procrastinator when I grew up but I don’t think I’ll become one until later in life.”
“Procrastination is like a credit card: a lot of fun until you get the bill.”

Chhavi Bansal ('98)
Sameet Desai ('98)

“Some say procrastination is an art form. It’s not. Procrastinating is an innate ability that lies within every person. Now, procrastinating and getting away with it is an art form, but that’s a whole other story.”

Meson Banas ('98)

Everyone has the ability to do it, but it takes much practice and work in order to perform the skill with efficiency.”
Christina Kim ('99), Jeff Huang ('99), and Sarena Donado ('99) utilize their sales techniques in raising money for the French Club. Second only to pizza, croissants are a popular after-school snack. "One advantage of hard-raising is that we get to leaves eighth period class early. The big disadvantage is that we don't get to eat the leftover food," said Kim.

Pema Patel ('99), Hye-Jin Kim ('99), and Jessica Hsiao ('99) examine their developed negatives for an upcoming project. Photography is one elective in which students possess a "creative license" when striving to convey a unique idea. "Photography helps me improve my artistic abilities. Through the course, I learn more about myself," said photography student Dave Wang ('99).

I Can Remember A Scene ...

Mr. James Gallagher

TO THE CLASS OF 1998

As you finish your fourth year at East, I am completing my 10th year as principal. In looking back over the last 10 years, it is hard to imagine a class which has impacted East as you have.
Both as individuals, teams, and collectively as a class, you have set a standard by which other classes will be measured.
Four years from now, many of you will be graduating from college, others will already have established themselves in the "Real World." In either case, you will be well into the next millennium and I would hope that some of the success you experience had its origins at East.
I wish each member of the class of 1998 the best that the future has to offer.

Sincerely,
Jim Gallagher
Principal

Mr. Charles A. Fleischman

I can remember a scene in early September of 1994, which seems just like yesterday, when an excited group of freshmen came to high school for their very first day. The Class of 1998 had arrived! Over the last four years you have had a myriad of experiences and I have shared many of them with you. I've had a tremendous time and have enjoyed this class as much or more than any previous group of students with whom I have worked.
Your actions and demeanor have made me proud to be your grade level principal. You have grown not only physically, but academically and emotionally, into a fine group of young men and women. We have shared much together and I have had the opportunity to know both you and a number of your families in a wonderful and personal way.
Although graduation is often seen as an end, the term commencement means "a beginning." You are beginning a new chapter in your life by ending an old one. Your past achievements and contributions will be part of the proud legacy of Cherry Hill High School East. And so, as you move on, I do as well, as principal of another fine high school in the Lenape Regional District. We both leave together knowing that we gave it our all!
As you move onto this new and exciting time in your life, look back and remember us all with fondness. On behalf of Mr. Haines, Mrs. Rohrbach and Mrs. Paul, I congratulate you on your graduation from East. I wish you only the best for the future and complete happiness in all that you pursue. You are the best!
Thanks for all of the good times that we have shared.

Sincerely,
Charles A. Fleischman

Mr. Edward Collins

Four years ago I was supposed to be the principal for the Class of 1998. Circumstances took my path in another direction. Now four years later circumstances bring my path back to the Class of 1998. I feel fortunate to be reunited with you at this time. To be with you during the best of times. To share those events that will remain with you forever - class trip, senior prom, graduation, and project graduation. The best of everything to the Class of 1998, and may our paths cross again.
Dear Class of '98

We began our high school days as frightened Freshmen. We walked through the halls holding our schedule and school map and wondered if we would ever find our way out of C-Wing. But it only took a few short weeks to begin to feel welcome. These last four years went by so quickly. Here, in such a big school, it is easy to find a group of friends with whom you feel comfortable. Our joyous days of winning Junior Powder Puff, unbelievable proms, striving for success to win Spirit Week, which as Seniors we did, and especially Disney World are just a few of the many wonderful things we have experienced. As we close this chapter of our memory book, we find that we have formed friendships that will last forever and memories that are unforgettable. We have traveled this path together, but now we must each go our separate ways and begin the next chapter of our book. But, as we go our separate ways we'll carry in our hearts memories that will last a lifetime. It has been our honor serving as your class officers. Best of luck in the future.

Proudest Academic Achievement: surviving

Last Words: A couple of nights ago, while delaying to study for yet another biology test, I sat down to watch television. As I began to zone out, an Emergency Broadcasting System message came on. In my deluded, post-cramming state of mind, I began to reflect... This is life is a test, it is only a test. In fact, I thought, life is a test much like my upcoming biology exam—one that no one has ever aced and will ever ace. I grimly to myself, had it been an actual life, we would have received further instructions on where to go and what to do! Without clear directions or an accompanying study guide, life is the kind of test we always complain to our teachers about, begging for that all important extra point. Life is the most difficult of exams, containing an infinite number of questions with no correct answers. But that’s the beauty of it! Unlike my biology test, in life, almost any answer can be right if we truly follow it through. In life, we can be free to take risks—and still pass in the end. In life, there is no time to worry obsessively over failure, only over the chances we miss when we don’t even try.

Goals: Be a successful engineer or doctor. Be jubilant at all times.

Proudest Academic Achievement: Getting an “A” in English IBAP
Last Words: I’m not dying yet! … This last semester of my high school years is the most painful one in my life because of senioritis kicking in at full-strength. As I dream of the graduation day, I also reminisce of my past memories with my friends. It seems as if yesterday I was just a freshman working diligently, but now I am a senior procrastinating and waiting for the graduation day. I know that I am going to miss some friends that I will not see in college and certain things that I did with them, but I also know that it is time to move on, and college is the next phase.

How do I relax on the Weekends: I’ll chill with my friends, whether at rehearsal or out on our own. Also, I take really long showers.
Goal: To succeed as a musical theater star, to extend my family, to be happy … always.

Proudest Academic Achievement: Becoming a ranking scholar
Last Words: Hindsight is no sight I’ve been told. Its funny that when I come to East as a freshman all I could think about was becoming a sophomore. When I was a sophomore, I couldn’t wait to be an upperclassman. Junior year felt merely like another stop on the way to becoming a senior. And, here I am. Only now do I truly realize how precious these last four years have been to me. I am proud of what I have accomplished in the classroom, but I am even prouder of what I’ve accomplished outside of it. I will always remember East, for here I discovered theater, music, friends, and mentors. It seems, while I was looking to the future, the present was happening all the time. I live for these moments, these happenings I cherish. I will miss them so much. But, I’m a senior … and I can’t help looking onward towards college. I guess its the natural state of things, to be looking ahead. I’m just happy that in-between, I found the time to look up, down, left, and right.

After studying, dancing, singing, running, talking, laughing, crying, and smiling, we leave a building that will forever hold the memories of our high school years. These years at East have provided us not only with four years of memories, but also a foundation for our future.

Experiencing what we have as a class, sharing our lives with one another, the bonds formed will remain indelibly etched in our minds, and most importantly, our hearts. We step away to begin our lives, forever grateful for these wonder years.

FRESHMAN YEAR

Timidly walking through the doors of the student entrance, we looked down the long corridors of East. "Cafeteria One," sternly said the hall monitor as he directed us into the lion's pit. Upon entering, we nervously glanced around, desperately searching for a familiar face, a recognizable voice. Homeroom was a thrill: "fill out this form" ... "take this home and get it signed" ... "here's your identification/library card - $2.00 if you lose it" ... "today is Day 0, tomorrow Day 1. Your schedule indicates the day you have lab ...". "They didn't say anything about labs at the Freshman Orientation," we thought to ourselves.

What a joy it was running through the halls in pursuit of our next class. "Five minutes! Not enough time!" Besides dodging upperclassmen selling elevator passes and finally realizing there was no fourth floor with a pool, the first month of our high school years came and went. We finally memorized not one, but two locker combinations.

Tasting "East's buffet", we busily attended introductory meetings for clubs and sports. FOP was the highlight of our after-school social life. We entertained in the East productions of Noises Off and The Wizard of Oz. Little did we know that the activities we participated in now would become such an integral part of our senior year. No sooner had we become accustomed to courses such as Earth Science, QPS, SteM, World Civilizations, Algebra, English, Geometry, and Freshmen Health than were we meeting our guidance counselors for the first time, deciding whether to take honors, accelerated, regular, or modified courses next year.

After surviving our terror of an earthquake, sophomore year showed its ugly face over the horizon. Horror stories and looks on the faces of pre-juniors were safely tucked in the backs of minds. As Final Exams came by, we consoled ourselves with the new relationships we formed with one another and upperclassmen. No longer did we view them as students with a monomaniacal obsession to destroy us, but as venerable sources of information on activities, classes, final exams, companions to the Freshman Dance, and, of course, alternate modes of transportation.
Say Good-Bye

SOPHOMORE YEAR

The second year of our high school experience enshrouded us as we walked through the familiar doors of the student entrance the very first day of school. “What? Pop quiz? We didn’t have a pop quiz on the first day last year!” Sleepless nights became a way of life as we sadly reminisced on the empty backpacks of freshman year, bringing the joy of becoming sophomores to envy.

Driver’s Ed lifted our spirits as visions of attaining a permit guided our efforts in reading the highlighted manuals for the written exam. After enjoying snow days conveniently placed by Mother Nature on swamped testing days, we listened during seventh period as O.J. Simpson’s “Not Guilty” verdict was announced over the intercom.

Our music talent took off in Joseph and The Technicolor Dreamcoat and Carousel. We attended the Cotillion in the school cafeteria and asked anyone we remotely knew to turn our class rings 98 times. Second semester earned us the title of pre-juniors, and, justly so. For, a five-day week blended into one long day topped off by a weekend spent in the library researching for term papers was the highlight of our lives. Cliff became our best friend when those 500 page English books were due while caffeine was the soul source of our dietary supplements. We discovered a whole new meaning to the word “procrastination” around Final Exam time and wondered whether sweating summer days late into June was worth the snow.

JUNIOR YEAR

The summer was highlighted with the Summer Olympics in Atlanta, Georgia. A “potential” teacher’s strike kept us on the edge of our seats. However, with shattered dreams, we sulked into school as scheduled. Guidance passes swamped our homerooms. “Do you know where you want to apply? ... Here is your class rank...” “Class rank? College? I just began high school!” we thought to ourselves.

No sooner had we purged our fears of taking on the responsibilities of upperclassmen were we mailing our checks of $32.00 to the SAT College Board for the torturous test in the spring. We fretted over grades, PSAT’s, college mail, and grades some more. All-nighters were a way of life, useless to complain about.

Second semester was marked by applications to Governor’s School, Boys’ State, Girls’ State, and Rotary. Leadership positions in Blood Drive, SGA, and every other activity became coveted prizes. We cheered as the Boys’ Volleyball team worked their way to winning the State Championships for the second time in a row and the Girls’ Swimming team capturing the State Title. The Miracle Worker and Cabaret were highlights of the drama department. Our worries were cast away at our first prom. Fancy dresses, dashing tuxedoes, great food, limos, and one another made an unforgettable night as we danced to “We’ve Got Tonight” in the Venice Plaza.

The end of our junior year edged even closer as the world decided to test our knowledge to the max with SAT’s, SAT II’s, AP Exams, and, of course, those goody ol’ Final Exams. Cameras captured our desire for the year to end as we posed for Senior Portraits. We cried out in pain as the seniors in our classes were exempt from the exam upon receiving a grade of “excellence” and yearned for our chances next year.

SENIOR YEAR: A BITTERSWEET VICTORY

After surviving junior year, our summer lives were attacked by an army of college applications. We came into school in fear of the task that lay before us and in joy. For, we were finally SENIORS! The head honcho of the student body, the “big man” on campus. We were leaders of the school and took the position seriously. Driving was a privilege we enjoyed. Strolling into homeroom one minute before the bell was great. Now, one minute after the bell... that was a problem. After being constantly reminded by campus police of the risk of losing our parking space after 12 lates, we pulled our act together.

We saw the first signs of Senioritis... lateness to class, lunch for three periods in a row... leaving school a little too early. However, early decision deadlines loomed ahead, suppressing our urge to slack off.

Spirit Week brought our class together for the last time in support of our school as a whole. The Homecoming Game was a blast as we won a decisive victory against West. Mr. East and the Variety Show provided us with some precious bonding time with the class. We mourned the deaths of Mother Teresa and Princess Diana. President Clinton rocked the nation with his alleged sex scandals. With heavy hearts, we listened to Mr. Fleischman’s farewell speech.

As second semester came, we walked through the hallways bareheaded and shivering in accordance with new school policy: no hats and jackets worn in building. After rubbing elbows with Mickey Mouse during our senior trip to Walt Disney World, we enjoyed a second helping of Senior Cut Days. Once again, we survived “Hell Week” as the productions of Broadway Review and South Pacific were a success. The Senior Prom highlighted our years at East with a magical night ending “A Time To Remember”. Before long, we marched on the green grass to Pompeo and Circumstance donned in red and white gowns, leaving behind life as we knew it for twelve years in exchange for an opportunity at success in the world.

Arriving at Project Graduation, we realized that this was the end of our era as children in a public school system and the beginning as adults in our own system. “Will I see you again?” we thought to ourselves as we glanced at one another. From the beginning of freshmen year, we had created memories unique to each one of us. We knew we would look back on the times we cried, and laugh. Little did we realize that we would look back on the times we laughed, and cry. Finally, after studying, dancing, singing, running, talking, laughing, crying, and smiling our way to the top, we can remember our bittersweet victory.

State at the vegetables spinning around and around, dashed haphazardly with shiny, cold blades in the food processor. Applying to college may make one feel as dizzy as the vegetables, constantly watching out for cuts and trying to climb to the top with a force persistently pulling down. After years of trying to find conformity in nonconformity, seniors must reveal a creativity that is illuminating to admissions officers as well as themselves. This creativity is one of the prominent factors seniors deal with when applying for college and scholarships. As Ariel Schwartz ('98) said, "Even after living seventeen years, I still find it hard to clearly define myself, making my personality stand out among a mass of other applicants. This process takes exceptional creativity, and I have come to a better understanding of myself because of it."

Besides being creative, finding financial aid is also exhausting. After searching for every possible way to finance a college education and maybe even graduate school, one may wish to speak German and live in Germany where there exists no college tuition. "So many people have advised me to go to a more expensive school than Rutgers, but not one has offered to make up for the difference in cost," said Sam Ritterman ('98). Seniors now have to think more about their future, the debt they will incur going to graduate school. The idea of being in debt even before getting a job is not very comforting to many students.

With all the pressures of deadlines, soul-searching, money-hunting, and maintaining grades, seniors still find time to relax. Although sometimes balancing a personal life and preparing for college may seem impossible, students need the time to release the stress. Jamie Lawton ('98) said, "There are lots of things to think about all at once: finishing applications, searching and applying for scholarships, having a life at the same time. Live in the present and think for the future."

"Sometimes it is so overwhelming but in the end it's all worth it," said Natalie Perelman ('98). Don't despair. Whirling around in a prospective college freshman processor definitely causes some screeches and bruises, but the end result is a beginning to a main course. Take time to enjoy the new experience.

Keith Oetting ('98) and Michael Rinehart ('98) sift through the wealth of college information located in the guidance office.

As rare as it may seem, many seniors have outside jobs. For years now, more and more high school students are choosing to work as well as attend school. No longer are the 'extra jobs' only for those who need the income. The main reason behind students working is the desire for spending money.

Now that so many students work, the logical question would be: how do they balance all of their responsibilities? It seems that all the homework teachers pile onto students is overwhelming enough. However, there are some who feel they can handle both the pressures of academics and a job. As John Woods ('98) said, "It's really hard when I'm trying to cram in all my homework and juggle my job at the same time - but it has taught me to take advantage of my free time better and learn how to deal with responsibilities."

As the class of 1998 signs out the pile of college applications, the preparation for the 'next step' is mounting. Many students agree that working is a good way to gain experience for the real world. "I think the experience is really worthwhile because now I know something about having a blue collar job, I won't turn out to be a kid who gets hit with reality after college," said Scott Kuo ('98). While the work-study experience may at times weigh heavily on the shoulders of students, the popular opinion seems to be that the benefits outweigh the sacrifices.

Carrying a tray of M&M cookies, Scott Kuo ('98) begins another working shift at the American Cookie Company. Many seniors choose jobs during their last year in high school not only to earn spending money but also to gain experience for the 'real' world.

Senior year, the final chapter of high school, places the entire world into perspective for the class of '98. Preparing to leave, seniors will encounter a new realm of possibility. Even though they are overflowing with the excitement of beginning something new, seniors are painfully aware of the period in their lives they are leaving behind.

During this time, a special bond exists between each senior towards the foundation where they experienced countless joys and disappointments. Robin Kim ('98) said, "I made so many lasting friends at East, and I hope that after I graduate, I will keep in touch with all of them." Besides friendships, seniors gained experiences indicative of the qualities needed to survive in the world after high school. As Sima Kothari said, "Through East's active student government, I learned the leadership skills strongly needed in college."

As graduation day grows closer, seniors have mixed feelings. The students can almost feel the joy of receiving a diploma certifying their accomplishment for four years of hard work as well as the sadness of leaving behind the fond memories they shared with friends. As Alissa Paladinetti ('98) said, "Graduation day will be a bittersweet day. It is the end of a chapter, but it is also the beginning."

For four long, hard, and interesting years, the class of 1998 has carried the responsibilities that come with being a high school student. What has changed? What has stayed the same? As graduation nears, the students reflect upon their journey from ninth grade to the present.

One of the biggest differences between freshman year and senior year is the increase in workload. Chhavi Bansal ('98) said, "When I was a freshman, I thought the workload was tough; but I took all honors classes sophomore year, so I was going through torture basically. Junior year was better, though." Many seniors say they not only observe a change academically, but also personally. As Gina Galie ('98) reflected, "Freshman year I was really timid, but now I have more self-confidence."

Taking everything into consideration, there exist many changes and similarities. For one thing, many seniors managed to maintain the same friendships throughout high school. However, one striking change is the growth in mind of senior students as they matured with the experiences of high school. As seniors prepare to enter into the real world, the growth and experience in high school will help them achieve their goals.

Senior Style

Come, O Ye skeptics! I invite you all to walk through the halls of Cherry Hill High School East for a day, and feast your eyes upon the vast variety of clothing styles exhibited by its inhabitants! In such a large school where everyone is trying to find a niche, the students here, especially the Seniors, often try to establish a place for themselves through their clothing styles.

Those who have found their identities dress wildly, casually, trendy, or just plain comfortably, barely restricted by the lenient dress code. But do they know how long that freedom of fashion will last? Do the Seniors realize that in the not-so-distant future, many of them may have jobs that will require a manner of dress that may not reflect their personalities or the threads they wear so shamelessly now? Probably not. If that is what lies ahead, then it is true that innocence is bliss, as the saying goes. For it is far better to revel in today's expressive clothes unknowingly than to forgo the fashion freedom and live in fear of the coming of conformity.

Say cheese! Members of the class of '98 display the variety of clothing styles worn by members of the senior class. From 'trendy' to 'relaxed', one is sure to find a full range of styles unique to groups of seniors as well as individuals.

The class of 1998 is finally enjoying the elite status that comes with senior territory and many are savoring every minute of it. Why? Well, for a lot of seniors, the work-play scale has tipped. Now, school takes the back seat to fun. Still, the question remains: What exactly is senioritis?

Senioritis is commonly defined as the lax attitude towards anything academic. In other words, instead of studying for that calculus test, a senior may just forget the notebook in school and party-hop with friends the night before the exam. In this situation, school becomes the perfect place for rest and relaxation. “It gets to the point that you just walk into class and fall asleep,” said Kevin Scanlon ’98.

One reason why so many seniors turn towards this anti-academic attitude is that after breaking their backs for four years, students are just plain tired. As a result, some seniors have taken easier classes during their final year. As Justin Karl ’98 said, “This year I had to drop a course because it was too hard.” Another reason for senioritis is the numerous distractions that tag along with twelfth grade. Jobs seniors have as well as positions they hold in clubs or extra-curricular activities add to the distraction from academic work. “In addition to all the work, there’s always college applications that need to worry over,” said Chris Lu ’98.

As the year finally dwindles down to the precious few days before graduation, the emotions can be overwhelming. Even though students of the class of ’98 may experience varying degrees of senioritis, the idea of leaving a place where they put in at least three years of hard work and energy for achieving success as well as building relationships wrenches the heart.

John Beek ’98 and Matt Soffer ’98 take time out of class to play games on a graphing calculator. Heading towards the end of their last year in high school, seniors find that the temptation of slacking off academically is an ever-present force. Some feel that a break is not only needed, but also well deserved.

Like St. Peter at the gates of heaven, there is a sense of entering some place special when Officer Lazar waves you through the entrance of the Cherry Hill East parking lot. Almost universally, Cherry Hill East students wish to reach that nirvana of driving. “I love driving,” said Saul Shamesh ’98. “Driving is great. Driving is like a big juicy steak.”

Yes, many East students regard driving as one of the most enjoyable aspects of teenage life. “I had a car which used to honk its horn every time I ran the windshield wipers. So, I was driving in the rain and honking away when this big guy starts staring at me. There was nothing I could do. I loved that car,” explained Russ Gutin ’98. It appears East students would travel to school in a clown car if it meant they could drive. Though often hazardous chemicals exit these decaying cars, East students will continue to pursue their love of driving.

Justin Brown ’98 and Nicole Brown ’98 arrive to school with smiles on their faces. Without the worry of catching the bus, many seniors enjoy the privilege of driving to school and squeezing in precious minutes of sleep. As Devon Segel ’98 said, “I like driving to school because I can leave whenever I want in the morning as well as the afternoon. Many times, the clubs I participate in end long before the late bus comes. With a car, I can leave when I want.”

The Senior Prom. No, this isn’t just another dance, this is THE dance: the last dance of the last year of high school, that magical night when the girls look gorgeous, the guys look hot, and all your dreams come true. At least, that’s the way it is in the movies.

While the Senior Prom is a night of glittering enchantment, a lot of preparation and stress go into making this night one to remember. First, students must undergo the process of getting a date, which, for single students, can be more than a little nerve-wracking. Once the date is settled, the guys rent tuxedos and order flowers, while the girls go on endless shopping trips in search of ‘The Dress’ and calculate the exact amount of time needed between hair and nail appointments.

Strategically placed on a Thursday night, the Senior Prom encompasses the whole weekend. Thus, extensive post-Prom plans must also be made. By the time the big night comes around, the excitement and anticipation that have been building are at an all-time high. But if the weather is good, the flowers match, and the limo can fit everyone, all stress is forgotten. Then, Prom-goers relax, and concentrate on having the time of their lives.

Ready to hit the dance floor, seniors pose with their dates for pictures before heading to the prom. Prom night is one of the most majestic as well as memorable times of high school.

After a fierce volley, Jason Geller ('98) is rewarded with an easy opportunity to overhand smash and win the point. Though these easy chances for points come only very so often, much strength and concentration is needed in order to put the ball away. This essential skill can take hours of practice to perfect or minutes depending on the determination of the player.

During a time out, Adam Scott ('97), along with Scott Mooney ('96), Sam Desai ('98), John Lyle ('98) and Alex Peretsman ('98), listen intently to the tips of Coach Moehlmann. Timeouts not only help players to fix and improve problems of the game, but also give time for players to rest. As John Chung ('98) said, "Because of the fast pace of the play, timeouts are essential to regain focus and avoid mental lapses during the most important parts of the game."

BOYS VOLLEYBALL: Lynnette Kim (Mgr.), Sameet Desai, Kenechi Ebede, Tim Roche, Peter Wasserman, Scott Mooney, Kevin Roche, Adam Scott, Scott Kuo, Arnold Luk, Eugene Tong, Alex Peretsman, John Lyle, Paul McNally, Coach Karl Moehlmann

With careful calculation, Greg Markus ('00) gets ready to put the ball. Golf is just one of many sports which requires extreme concentration. The slightest distraction can cause a player to lose concentration. Markus said, "Whenever my opponent puts pressure on me, I just try to relax, clear my mind, and focus on the shot."

Although not the most glamorous position, Eugene Tong ('98) displays the reason for having a setter on the volleyball team. With soft hands and intense concentration, the setter gets the ball to the hitters. Besides setting the ball, a setter has other responsibilities. As Tong said, "The setter calls the plays and carries them out according to his view of the opposition's defense."

With her teammates looking on, Devon Glick ('98) makes contact with a pitch from Lenape. One of the requirements in softball is the ability to keep one's eyes on the ball. This skill determines the difference between a hit and a miss. As Glick said, "It is important to keep your eyes on the ball and stay focused at all times. You develop this technique usually at batting practice."

To win in golf, one must have a solid mental strategy. For Neil Bang ('00), fun is the key. "When I'm about to hit an important drive, I try to relax and do my normal shot. Even when I'm down in my matches, I just keep on going, and I don't let winning distract me from enjoying the game."
GET A GRIP

The hand arches back. The eyes click toward the teammate. Every muscle, every cell of the body is poised for action to execute the perfect throw. Ralph Jedicka ('98), who plays catcher/pitcher, just can't get enough of the game. "I love it all. It's pretty much my life... I mean, the feeling I'd get after a base hit - it's like a natural high."

One of the great myths about javelin throwing is that only arm strength is needed for success. Steve Decina ('99) demonstrates that the 'javelin strength' lies in the upper body. However, in order to have a good throw of 82-100 yards, an athlete needs good technique to control the muscling of his infinite reservoir of Herculean strength.

Displaying traditional hitting stance, Doug Rodio ('98) awaits a pitch from his opponent. One skill a baseball athlete requires is the skill of knowing how to hold the bat. One big mistake guideline in baseball is to never choke-up on the bat.

Running in full stride, Kristy Gallagher ('99) leads the pack in a sprint for the ball. In lacrosse, one of the skills needed is being capable of running with the ball. Handling the stick the right way can make the difference in who has control of the ball first. As Jen Hess ('98) said, "One of the important techniques is cradling. After you get the ball, you have to be able to run with the ball, which requires a great deal of coordination."

Improving upon excellence, East Girls Track forced here to reach a new level for each competition. The goals set by the team motivate these runners to overcome challenges presented by opponents. In such a race, Captain Jackie Worthington ('99) stresses that "because everything you have relies on what you worked on for this one race, it is important to get out in front early to set the pace so that the rest of the race you know whether to pick up the speed or remain the same." By helping and supporting one another, East runners won their first meet of the year against West.

Taking a flying leap, Beth Agnar ('90) reaches for the sky in the long jump event. Along with the ability to jump far, long jumpers need to reach for maximum distance. The amount of an athlete's control of this skill can make the difference between first and second place. As Agnar said, "Speed will give you a lot of distance. However, reaching after you jump will give you that extra distance you need."
With sticks raised to the sky, the Girls’ Lacrosse team performs their ritual before their game against Eastern. One of the team’s distinguishing qualities is their team spirit and support for one another. This ritual is one of many which are vital in allowing the members to give their best. As Tricia Kang ‘99 said, “Support is an important aspect of the game because it psyches up players as well as boosts the team.”

Gliding over the bar, Kristy Erickson ‘98 displays her perfected high-jump technique in a meet against West. When participating in the high-jump event, an athlete must remember the positioning of the leg, arms, and the back. As Erickson said, “High-jump involves not only physical strength and conditioning, but also mental strength. You have to be able to concentrate on the jump itself, and at the same time, block out the distractions of the other events going on.”

Flying over the hurdle, Shannon Agner ‘99 competes in the 110 meter hurdles during a meet against West. Races involving hurdles require athletes to know, but master the hurdling technique. Mastering this skill provides efficiency, increased speed, and agility when running a hurdle race.

Nancy Dawson ‘99 butts elbows with Eastern as she digs for the ball. Not only is good stick-handling technique needed in lacrosse, but also aggressiveness. With one-on-one match-ups, aggressiveness gives an edge to the player as well as the team.

This spring, several new talents helped varsity veterans Josh Cohen (’97) and Anthony Langella (’97) complete a successful spring tennis season. One of the newcomers, Josh Latourette (’00), beat some of the best players from rival schools. His most memorable match, however, was in 1995. “When I beat the #17 ranked boy in the national 14 and under category, it was a turning point for me because I realized that if I worked hard enough, I could defeat even the top ranked players.”

Setting up, Jeremy Schaefer (’99) carefully lines the ball for the putt. Although golf is a relatively new sport to East, players such as Schaefer provide the talent for the team’s success. The “talent” in golf not only involves a sense of hitting distance, but also the ability to relax while performing critical shots.

Up and over, Jason Bune (’99) competes in the 110 meter hurdles against Eastern. As an underclassmen, Bune, as well as other underclassmen on the Boys Track Team, are the basis for the team’s future success. Competing in races now provides the experience and knowledge that is needed in reaching goals set for junior and senior years. The reward in accomplishing these goals will not only benefit the athlete, but also the team.

With hands in the middle, East’s Boy’s Baseball Team “pumps up” before the start of the game against Paul VI. As in all sports, team spirit is the main ingredient for success. Team spirit provides a sense of unity for the players and the coaches, thus creating the platform for everyone to provide 100% for the team.

TOTALS Wins: 5 Losses: 10

With intense concentration, Stephanie Fifis ('98) waits for the ball in a game against Eastern. Playing first base requires not only a player's concentration, but also a player's ability to act quickly.

Following in the footsteps of his brother Kevin, Tim Roche ('00) passes the volleyball to the setter, making sure to keep a solid platform while keeping his eyes on the ball. Starting the year as defending state champs, the team overcame much pressure and took home a second state championship title. Kevin Roche ('97) said, "This year, we had something to prove. We had some injuries that hurt us, but we did well with what we had to work with. That is what makes us state champs."
Trapping the ball perfectly, Shannon Agner ('98) chips the ball to a fellow teammate, starting a counter offensive to the Bishop Eustace offensive play. Being a midfielder, Agner fits the role of an overall good player who can run the field, shoot, as well as dribble the ball.

Running on the soft ground, cross-country members have nothing but the weeds and fellow runners to keep them company. As Andrew Keller ('00) and Adam Lawford ('98) run in rhythm with the pounding of their hearts, they feel a pure satisfaction of accomplishing their goals as they drew nearer to the finish.

With a full swing, Tanya Scarlett ('98) returns a passing shot down the line. As the ball skids off, the point is won, placing the game in hand. Shots such as these require preparation, practice, and the ability to perform under pressure.

Striving for perfection, Heather Feldman ('00) displays her remarkable poise. Although gymnasts perform routines with an appearance of ease and grace, what one sees is a result of months of hard work. However, even with the tough preparation, the performance is the time when gymnasts get to enjoy the fruits of reward for their toil. "I dedicate myself to the sport because I really enjoy the sport; I love gymnastics," said Feldman.

With a collision imminent, Caryn Davis ('98) reaches to place the ball in the net. Soccer is an extremely competitive sport, requiring great endurance from each player. With this in mind, Davis has to prepare herself mentally and physically for any circumstance in order to make a scoring chance possible.

GIRLS SOCCER: Devon Searles, Erin Weaver, Barbara Jones, Elizabeth Agner, Laura Pursell, Richa Vurna, Julie Gorman, Carolyn Snyder, Kara Shore, Laura Hammond, Lindsey McGinn, Rachel Singer, Emily Scott, Shannon Agner, Nnedima Onwujekwe, Meredith Sobie, Emily White, Katie Daly, Karen Donahue, Caryn Braunstein, Jackie Cona, Jessica Naumann, Erin Pursell, Jessica Natali, Emily Novick, Jill Sweeney, Alyssa Reed, Gill Sweeney, Abby Fichter, Marta Kravitz, Audra Herman, Rachel Sterling, Jacqueline Kamison, Christine Madden, Sarah Garonzik, Nancy Dwyer, Alison Sica, Stacy Zallie, Isha Buch, Caryn Davis, Coach Trautman, Coach Young.

Although East Girls’ Gymnastics team is renowned for its adept agility, the strength of each individual player is reflected in the success of the team holistically. As captain Cindy Greenberg (’98) explained, “Each individual’s score contributes to the total team score, thus making gymnastics a very cooperative team sport.”

Concentration. The East Girls’ Tennis team knows discipline well as team-member Danielle Jacobs (’98) focuses on the placement of her backhand stroke. Her ability to shrug off the pressures of the game only helped Jacobs earn a 100-win career at East.

Girls’ Tennis: Tanya Scarlett, Becky Sendrow, Danielle Jacobs, Lauren Richter, Jennifer Brown, Nadine Girland, Holly Braunstein
Jacquie Worthington ('98) sets her pace as she races her opponents and the clock. In cross country, more than the opponent, the clock is the insurmountable foe of every runner. To conquer this foe, cross country runners must possess the courage to take 'the leap of faith' in believing the ability to reach a set goal time.

With his body fully stretched, Nick Daly ('98) soars to the heavens as he saves a potential goal. In the game of soccer, the slightest hesitation inflicts a loss for the entire team. As Daly explained, "The goalie is the one position in soccer where you have to be courageous or you're going to get beat."

Poise Under Pressure

During a game, a player needs to demonstrate not only technique but also the ability to remain calm during the most difficult situations. Pat McCall ('98) exhibits masterful technique while maneuvering past his opponent. As McCall game attitude reveals, having courage under fire is the key difference between winning and losing. "I am a goal-scoring extraordinaire, letting me overcome even the most tense situations."

Rushing forward to beat her opponent to the ball, Wendy Manus ('98) exhibits the stamina needed in the game of field hockey. Besides stamina, players need to display a “no fear” attitude not only to benefit themselves, but also to demoralize the opponent. "It is necessary to show strength and aggression to score the opposing team," explained Manus.

Brian Tobin ('98) casts up onto the high bar into a handstand stance, relinquishing any fear of the height or dizzying feats he must perform. As a gymnast, one has to push the body to the limit in order to achieve set goals.

Like the Energizer Bunny who keeps going and going, Allison Venuto ('98) makes her way along the cross country race course. The key to succeeding in a sport such as cross country is endurance. No matter how much a runner may just want to stop or collapse from exhaustion, she has to dig deep inside and find the courage to keep going, to win.

As Ian Sterling ('98) and his opponent struggle for the soccer ball, fear of failure is the last thought in their minds. A significant part in putting forth one's best performance requires the ability to eliminate any doubt of the possibility of unfortunate occurrences. "When you're out there, you don't think about getting hurt. When you get hurt, it's probably, because you were thinking about it," said Sterling.

With a level platform, Annalisa Mendoza ('98) passes the ball to her teammate during a warm-up drill called "peppering." A good pass makes a good set, which in effect, creates a possible kill. With peppering, practicing of all three techniques is accomplished.

GIRLS CROSS COUNTRY: Julie Lurman, Alison Venuto, Jackie Worthington, Sheri Levin, Coach Danielle Hellig.
As a fierce opponent approaches, Kara Hawk- slay (’98) instinctively passes the ball. In sports such as field hockey where aggressiveness is only half of the game, players must have no hesitation in looking upon the opponent as the enemy.

Rob Koslow (’01) and Mike Nadelberg (’01) run through one of the forests in Cherry Hill to get the feel of real competition. In cross-country, the best surface to run on is the worst. Having to maneuver through woods with holes and tree roots, runners learn how to cope with these adversities.

As she focuses ever ounce of her energy into the kick, Stephanie Singer (’99) feels the surge of adrenaline all soccer players feel when they are about to make a goal. Even though she is primarily instrumental in centering the pass for a shot, Singer has contributed to a winning play and, like all athletes, the thrill of the point is enough for her to put forth all effort into succeeding.

"Tall people are good volleyball players." This is a hackneyed phrase passed off often due to the height providing advantage at the net for blocking and spiking. Joy Pela (’00) knows of this stereotype all to well and practices her bumping technique to become an overall player concerned not only with hitting, but also with the more important aspects of volleyball such as passing and setting.

Debbie Goodman (’00) carefully times her movement, exhibiting why gymnastics is a sport of precision and accuracy. With long hours of preparation and practice, gymnasts eventually acquire the unique gift of obtaining equilibrium when they enter the zone.

Reaching for a return shot, Becky Sendrow (’98) squares up to return the tennis ball. If anything, tennis requires perfect timing. You have to be in the right place at the right time in order to hit the ball exactly where you want it. Sendrow has perfected her ability of ‘perfect timing’ thus helping her in becoming one of the best tennis players of South Jersey.
After running for over two miles, Sherri Levin ("00") rounds the corner, heading for the welcome sight of the finish line. As simple as cross-country may seem, it is a sport that requires not only endurance within the body but also the heart. The urge to keep racing can only be kept going by the will to succeed.

"Grin and Bear it." The exact words gymnasts repeat to themselves everyday during practice while painstakingly repeating techniques needing much strength and skill. Exhibiting balance as well as strength, Fabio Kwon ("98") concentrates on maintaining his center of gravity as he performs a circle on the pommel horse. In order to receive high scores from judges, gymnasts must achieve perfection not only with power but also with grace.
After successfully controlling the rebound, Christine Daniels ('99) begins her journey down the court, dribbling the ball out against a tight coverage of opponents. In the game of basketball, maintaining possession is difficult because players must get the ball to their net without the opponent stealing the chance of attaining the points. However, with practice and cooperation, players perfect this exercise to the level of making it seem like a walk in the park.

Trying to break the hold of a double leg takedown, Mike Speesler ('00) views to gain points by driving his opponent to the mat. In the sport of wrestling, pinning is one way of winning, but achieving points for certain techniques can also obtain victory. Wrestlers strive towards perfection by backing up as many points as possible while keeping the opposition to a minimum.

"Let's Go Cougars!" Tiffany Carter ('99), Christine Ortega ('99), and Kelley Parker ('99) practice their halftime routine in preparation for the upcoming boys' basketball game. When considering the main purpose of cheerleading to be providing spirit for the school team, the sport may seem glamorous. However, as other sports, cheerleading requires hours of practice in order to perfect routines as well as create new means of fostering school spirit. "We spend many hours practicing to make our routines perfect," said Carter.

Sarah Pearce ('98) bowls with the intention of experiencing the fruits of a bowler's dream: a strike, one of the words that gives great pleasure to anyone at the bowling lanes. Students on East's bowling team realize the road to that dream is one lined with hours of practice.

GIRLS' BOWLING: Maria Stoyer, Sarah Pearce, Lisa Rickenbacher, Jen Padlo, Nina Evangelista.
Swimming the backstroke, Kristel Haeuser ('99) ponders on perfection not only her stroke but also the dreaded turn-around. In swimming, most of the races take up more than one length of the pool. Consequently, swimmers are required to touch the wall at the end of the race. The problem with the backstroke is that swimmers are unable to see the wall; thus, they must rely on a "perfect instinct" for the turn-around.

Jen Padlo ('00) exhibits excellent form with pressure on the lead leg and full extension of the arm. Be it strike, spare, or gutter ball, bowling techniques define the type of bowlers we become. As Padlo said, "We need practice, concentration, and consistency to get the wins we want."

Girls' Basketball: Gina Galie, Anna Lagamba, Allison Schnepper, Stephanie Filis, Alicia Barteis, Annie Cheng, Bari Utair, Tyasha DuBois, Christine Daniello, Joanne Bualto, Kate Walsh, Athena Nienzak, Lara Baron, Lindsay Tjalles, Joy Pela, Lauren Marlowe, Beth Habina, Coach Linda Bolger.
"I am woman, hear me roar!" Atop the shoulder of Diane Lessor ('98), Sarah Schwartz ('98) ends a perfect routine with a bang. Oftentimes, in cheerleading, things don't go as planned. The ability to think on one's feet and complete a routine on pure creativity is a skill well suited for the sport.

As a relay runner, good judgement of timing is the key towards achieving victory. This concept is all too familiar to Wendi Menus ('98), who realized how one has to be aware of when to sprint ahead, rush forward, as well as pass the baton. In accomplishing this feat of concentration, athletes find it useful to keep their minds open and feet light.

Inhaling deeply in preparation for another "deep sea" dive, Dan Kent ('00) warms one of the most difficult strokes of his sport, the butterfly. Although the race is over in a matter of seconds, swimmers concentrate intensely on form and style, ready to adjust at any time. As Kent said, "When you are swimming, you need to focus on the race because the race is too short not to."

BOYS' BASKETBALL: John Enny, Scott Mooney, Kwame Biney, Tim Roche, Matt Minoff, Jeff Walsh, Ed Santos, Marcus Bullock, Scott Plasky, Andrew Schwartz, Jeff Pela, Jason Markus, Coach John Valore.

BOYS' BOWLING: Matt Robinson, Mike Mishkin, Sean Solomo, Rashad Foley, Jason Fensch, Coach Walt Uranich.
Running the middle leg of the 4 X 100 relay race, Shannon Agner (’98) puts the practiced technique of signal- ing to use. Signaling, usually in the form of calling, plays a vital role in the timing of the race due to the fact that each runner needs to receive the baton at an optimum speed. Decisions such as passing the baton are anything but ‘spur of the moment’ and require numerous practice races before creating the environment suitable for an excellent race.

In order to keep up with every subtle nuance in the sport of bowling, Matt Robinson (’01) fine-tunes his release. While criticizing one’s own technique is a positive method for improvement, analyzing the technique of fellow players is also beneficial. Integrating one’s own technique with another’s is a process that definitely does not occur in the spur of the moment; but takes time and patience.

Kicking it into high gear, Bob Moehler (’98) swims for home in the butterfly race. One strategy mastered by swimmers is to begin the sprint towards the finish line. The sprint is a split-second decision plagued all too often by swimmers beginning too early, thus expending all their energy before the end of the race.

GIRLS’ INDOOR TRACK: Shannon Agner, Christy Erickson, Justine Dymerska, Lillian Chou, Wendy Manus, Beth Agner, Allison Venuto, Susan Caruso, Makiko Matsumoto, Devon Glick, Kara Hawksley, Christy Gallagher, Coach Lee Troutman.

Jason Markus ('98) places the rebound back up onto the board after the missed field goal attempt. Feeling a "superiority" over the players below, the sense of being able to accomplish anything overflows within oneself.

Lisa Rackenbaker ('01) sends yet another ball on its way towards the yawning abyss of darkness specked by white pegs at the end of the lane. One unique aspect of bowling is that it's a recreational sport loved not only by members of a team.

Cheerleaders for the boys' basketball team line up with smiles all the way down while preparing for an upcoming game. For many members, cheerleading is an enjoyable sport. Even though the sport requires participants to meet physical demands, the love of the sport makes the time spent practicing worth the effort.

Putting a spin on the ball just prior to the release, Sean Solomon ('99) hopes his effort pays off with a strike. It is true that bowling is an enjoyable sport. However, the sport strikes the chords of the heart when one racks up a strike, or two, or three, ....

While rushing through the air in a dive, Will Wecker ('01) feels the intense thrill of flying. Only in such a sport as diving can the athlete sour and splash (hopefully, not too much of a splash) into a refreshing pool. The rush of the dive is a common addiction amongst athletes, thus binding them to the sport for life.

Just inside the arc, Lisa Baron ('99) succeeds in releasing the ball before the defense blocks the shot. Basketball is one of the few sports in which one can play not only as a youngster, but also as an adult. Growing up with the sport infuses a love that is impossible to destroy.

Winter 1998 Stats 165
The preparation for college begins in the early years of high school. Students struggle to take the Honors, AP, and Accelerated courses in order to heighten their GPA. Others immerse themselves in the large array of East activities available by running for Student Government, joining the Spanish Club, or participating in a sport. As Nancy Cheng ('99) said, "As a junior, I also have the pressure of college. At the moment, I am trying to balance my activities with the honors courses that I am also currently taking."

After the pressures of junior year pass, senior year initiates the college application process. Seniors send out for their applications after choosing their schools. Then, they ask their favorite teachers to write their college recommendations. The essays are the last and most difficult step. One week before January first, students realize that watching the sun rise for the fifth time in a row is not beautiful anymore. As Heather Cameron ('98) said, "I never realized how long the application process would be. Writing the high school College Board number 310223 for the hundredth time is not fun." Finally, after all that, the agonizing wait for 'the letter' begins.

In the college application process, students go through college viewbooks to familiarize themselves with the numerous schools that they are considering. Engaging in this task, Chrisa DiFilippo ('98) reads over one of the many viewbooks available at guidance. As Eric Troy said, "At the beginning of the application process, reading viewbooks is the best way to decide which schools you want to apply to."

One of the major ingredients of the college application is the essay. In order to gain suggestions of the essay topics, Maryann O'Donnell ('98) and Gem Bona ('98) meet and discuss ideas to help write their essays. According to senior Christian Chen, "Sometimes when you're stumped on a college essay, it really helps to talk to a friend to get ideas."

Debbie Barn ('98) and Carlee Tanenbaum ('98) peruse over college information in the guidance office, the haven for seniors during the months of September through January. First semester is the busiest time for seniors due to the overwhelming amount of work required when applying to colleges.
During the first semester of senior year, students meet with their guidance counselors for advice as they apply to colleges. Dan Hannum ('98), considering a prospective school, examines a yearbook with Mrs. Ciarroce. Like Dan Hannum said, "As I choose colleges and write my applications, I'm finally realizing how valuable my counselor really is."

Upon entering the twelfth grade, seniors are confronted with a multitude of decisions regarding college. Because of all these choices, students are given an opportunity to figure out which college is right for them. Dana Gubbele ('98) and Cortney Abramsohn ('98) look over college bulletins in the guidance office as they search for their perfect school.

As seniors embark on their final year at East, they undergo much anticipation. Dr. O'Breza, the head of the guidance department, eases the college application process for Brian Doe ('98). As seniors enter their last year, they need as much assistance from the guidance department as possible.

Florence lover and Eric Dagorski ('99) discuss "Distract" while sharing a special bonding moment together in the hallway. A key responsibility among hall monitors is keeping the corridors in order. Nevertheless, the East monitors go beyond the call of duty, and, in the process, reveal something about their personalities. As Wynn Williamson ('99) said, "Perry Reinick is one of the sharpest, Wittiest men in this school and he is one of the few not teaching a class."

Laughing with one of his students, Mr. Foster presents yet another example of an East teacher doing more than just teaching. As portrayed by the look on his face, Matt Young ('01) is thrilled to be learning about Industrial Technology the best way: hands-on.

For the science labs, students are paired with lab partners in order to enhance the learning process involved with laboratory work. Students find lab partners to be invaluable because a helping hand is always useful. Seniors Gen Bona and Tanya Scarlett review laboratory data together during their chemistry lab.

Amidst a pile of notes, Tom Caruso ('00) listens intently to Sarah Cho ('00) as she explains a research topic. East students often work together to increase their understanding of specific areas of study. As Rosa Wu ('99) said, "I think that group work is a great way to gain insight because every person sees things differently."

Preparing pastries in Mrs. Dilba's cooking class, Allison Schnepper ('98) and Laura Hammond ('00) work together while mixing the ingredients for a pie. Cooperation not only facilitates the process of completing a project, but also provides environment for fellow peers to get to know one another better. "I feel that by working together with other students, I get to meet new individuals and form new relationships," said Annie Lai ('98).

Seniors Adam Weiner and Netanel Eliezer act out scenes from "Pygmalion" for English class. Projects such as these require the cooperation of peers in order to succeed in achieving the best results. As Winnie Liang ('98) said, "Working with other kids really helps me learn the subject material as well as have fun at the same time."
Learning In Numbers

Sooner or later, everyone has got to do it. Whether it's for a science lab, an English project, or just a tough math problem, students must work together to get the job done. This constant interaction between students eventually evolves into a valuable skill that helps East graduates in the future.

Just how can cooperation lead to success? For one thing, if a student needs help with her biology paper, she can work with her teacher to figure out the problem. Also, when two or more students cooperate to complete an assignment, they not only finish it faster, but they also learn to work with others in an effective way. As Danielle Kraus ('00) said, "It's good to work with other because from what other people say, it becomes more of a learning experience and you get other peoples' input, especially when you're studying. Sometimes it depends on the people you work with. It has taught me to be more open to other peoples' views."

Furthermore, collaboration helps one develop skills that will be necessary in a future career. In the 'real world,' if one wants to get the job or promotion, a firm handle on cooperation skills is almost a must. Jeff Morrow said, "You have to know how to talk to people and communicate; for, you will need it for interviews, job projects, ... your future career will almost always require you to know how to deal with people."

As the 1998 school year comes to a close, many students will be going off to college while others may be applying for a job. No matter what a student plans to do after high school, one thing is for sure: the ability to work effectively with others is a definite benefit on any resume.

A Break with Tradition

Everyone experiences it. Sometime during one's school day, there will be a class where the teacher seems to drone on forever. Thankfully though, not all East teachers lecture their lessons. In fact, there are quite a few who use innovative methods to get their lesson across. English teacher Mr. Carr is a prime example. He describes his teaching style as "eclectic," and by that he means he tries many different ways to reach his students. "I want my students to be as engaged in the class as possible...I joke around a lot during class, but I'm also very serious when I'm teaching. It paces the class better if there are breaks for some humor. Also, during group discussions, I try to create an environment where people feel comfortable about speaking out." Thus, rather than adhering to one strict regimen, teachers such as Mr. Carr offer relief from the common mundane style of teaching.

Reading a passage from Henry James' "The Turn of the Screw", Mrs. Dobromilski sits between students Melissa Anderson ('98) and Kevin Akinskas ('98) during a class discussion. One style of teaching utilized by teachers is to motivate students into discussion by creating the right environment. "We learn through discussion rather than the recitation of facts. Mrs. Dobromilski plants the seed in our mind and we expand upon the idea," said Sitting in front of the still life display, which is comprised of Gandalf's sword, a violin, and a painting of a basketball player, is a teacher's primary role. The students, who are engaged in the process of explaining through tangible, visual objects, find their heights when they are able to express their ideas. Mr. Carr's English Language Arts students who have been asked to design a presentation on the theme of "Falling in Love" have been working hard on their projects.

"I think it's important for students to be able to express themselves through their writing," Mr. Carr stated. "This is an opportunity for them to explore their interests and develop their skills."

Psychology, a popular senior class, allows students to both experience and learn theories simultaneously. Helping Mr. Sharp test the psychological theory of addiction, Sarah Fehder ('01) participates in one of the many activities involved in psychology. “One of the tools we use in psychology is simulations, which make the theories we learn more complete,” said Mr. Sharp.
Mr. Frank spots with a smile as Gary Cobb ('98) perseveres in lifting weights to continue building his upper body strength. Weight training is not only offered as a physical education class, but also as an after school activity. Such activities supported by the physical education department open the door for students concerned with improving their health as well as their strength. This "door" policy is an opportunity that many East students take advantage of. "The school's opening weight training to students is helpful to students who take advantage of it because it's a healthy activity," said Cobb.

With greasy hands and an oil-stained cover up, Mr. Powell explains braking mechanisms to Buddy Di Fabio ('98) and his fellow classmates. Auto shop is one class offered to students that involves hands-on learning as the primary method of education. The department offers students considering a future in mechanical careers the chance to learn from experience by fixing old cars.

A pen, paper, and a bottle of white-out are all instruments that Frank Cattramone ('98) needs to write an essay for English lab. One of the main objectives of East's English department is to teach students how to write not only coherently but also with a personal, unique style. The department's emphasis on composition prepares students heading to college for the daunting task of writing an infinite number of papers weekly; this aspect eliminates one of the many details that East students will not have to worry about during the pre-college months. "The lab program has been very helpful when used properly since, I think, it all depends on the teacher," said Cattramone.

Jen Adams ('98) practices with Karen Willocky ('00) for vocal workshop. The music department is one section of the school curriculum that functions not only during regular school hours, but also during the after-school hours, when much of the learning for students takes place. East's strong music program thrives on the talented individuals of the student body who behold music as an important aspect of their future. The music department gives many opportunities for these students to experience music outside of school with performances such as that at Carnegie Hall in New York City.

Kate Medzitokvish ('98) looks on as seniors Sharon Cravens and Rebecca Sellers concentrate on completing questions for their physics class. The physics department strives to promote the student's awareness of an existing connection between "book" physics and the events occurring in their surroundings — in the real world. For example, towards the end of the school year, the department takes students on a field trip to Great Adventure, where physics is applied to rides such as Free Fall and The Great American Scream Machine.

Using various kitchen appliances, seniors Stephanie Mennies and Sharon Cravens work together to cook a meal for the class, World of Foods. For many East students, this class is very helpful because it exposes them to various forms of cooking and food. Such exposure will be particularly useful when students go out into the real world and must cook food for themselves. As Mennies said, "You have to go through life knowing how to cook. Without that, you'll starve."
Kristy Erickson (95)
“I love Math. I had some really great teachers, and they just made it so fun for me. Solving a hard math problem just gives me this really cool feeling. I love it.”

Jerry Levine (99)
“In our programming classes, we are treated to the use of Jurassic age computers upon which we write amazing DOS-based stuff. It’s really neat to do this.”

Diana Kang (98)
“3-D Art is the only class where you don’t get any directions for the projects. The teacher is really open to ideas and it is this openness that emphasizes self-actualization.”

Jeff Hwang (99)
“Although many students don’t find health class very vital, it’s actually pretty helpful. This class provides some time for extra studying as well as teaching about nutrition and STD’s.”

In an animated conversation, Hope Weinstein (98) and Rashid Hawkins (98) learn skills not found in a typical history textbook. They learn the invaluable skills in the social studies department’s unique course, Natural Helpers. Although the class attracts people who already have a “helping” instinct, it gives people life-skills which will help carry them into the working field and beyond.

“AH! You cut off too much!” cries the dummy head as Georgette Keels (99) practices one of the many haircutting techniques used in cosmetology. The art of cosmetics and their use compose a department at East based on students’ learning through hands on experience in school as well as in competitions. With this foundation, this department offers students interested in the cosmetology field the freedom of earning a license to work as a cosmetologist immediately after high school.

In her ROTC uniform, Janine Tait (99) positions the reflector and lamp in preparation for an upcoming photo shoot. Photography is one department at East that promotes a learning experience solely based on the expression of the students’ creativity. For example, the culminating project for photography students is their participation in the displaying of their works for family members and friends. During this occasion, students take advantage of the opportunity to stand by their creations and exhibit what they have learned via pictures. “Photography is a way to express myself. Many people don’t realize that it is used for that purpose,” said Tait.

No matter where we will be, USA, France, or Germany.
Our friendship will always last,
In present, future, and past.

Memories
CEYA Volleyball Champs • Dynamite • Church • Pizza • Fremany • dances • supporters • “Are you sure? Do you mind?” • “I don’t mind. I don’t care. It’s as you want.” • “You can dive?” • French lunch • Honeys craziness in the car • and many more to come.
The Kuhl Sisters

To my dearest sister Alise,
I'll miss:
Doing puzzles when it snows,
Choosing out each other's clothes
Chilling many late nights together,
Being dumb and being clever
Driving around in your car,
Loving it though we don't get very far
Thinking about you going away to school,
Knowing life here will not be as cool
Chillin' on our porch outside is shot,
Playing with Garfield, our kitty-cat
Sharing everything with you,
Wondering if I can come too
Singing to our favorite tunes,
Wishing you wouldn't have to go so soon
Dancing with Michael McKee,
Playing Manhala while watching T.V.
Listening to all of your advice
Realizing Alise that you're so nice
Always & forever looking up to you
Alise, I will always love you

You are not only my sister, but my bestest friend in the whole world. I'll miss you to death. Time has gone by so fast. Thanks for all the memories and for sharing two chill years with me at school. Thanks for always being there for me too. I love you!

To my brother:

Realizing the year has come to an end
Our friendship and memories will still extend

Growing up was so much fun,
But now our horseplaying and fighting is all done

Your coaching in soccer was a big help to me
I'd say you're the best big brother anyone can be

Your personality and loyalty make you who you are
By the way "sorry for the dirty accident you had to clean up in your car."

Being in the same school as you was really a change
You were so over protective of me that you kept me in eye range.

Thanks for checking me into school when I was late
But when you push me around it's the only thing I hate.

When it comes to neatness, you're definitely on top,
You think you're "the man" and can't be stopped.

When it comes to girls, you get me confused
I just hope that they don't get abused.

You're always roaming in another town
But when I ask for a favor, you never let me down.

On Halloween decorating is fun
But when you and the crew go out you seem to come home with a ton.

Celebrating Rosh Hashanah was the best we had
With Phil and Nick for company the conversation never got bad.

It's nice to have pancakes when you get up late
For you, McKee, Potter and Gross you could not wait.

During lunch you sometimes were fickle
But for Tambo, he could never find a nickel.

With you and your friends going to college, school
won't be the same
I guess I'll have to wait for the holidays or Thanksgiving game.

Thanks for being my best friend because you really care,
College will be really fun, so enjoy yourself there!

I love you!

Love, Meredith

Lauren,

We want you to realize how wonderful it is to have you for a daughter. Sometimes, of course, we worry about you, but that's just a natural part of being a parent. More often, we think about how special you are, and how much joy your cheerfulness has added to our lives. We may have criticized you at times, we may have tried at times to change you, but we love you just the way you are. The way you are makes us proud. Good luck in all you do, you are the best!

I looked back at all those years and came to a conclusion: we were right in eighth grade and we are right now. I don't know where I'd be without you, Jeff, my soulmate. Thanks for putting up with me, I know I'm tough, but you did it with grace. I'm confident that you'll always be with me. Love and kisses your friend for life, Jackie.

JACKIE-Since the first time I set eyes on you, I knew that there was something there between us...something special. Ever since then I've fallen in love with you and you've become the most important person in my life. It all started our Junior year in sixth period History class.
Little did we know our friendship would lead to love. There is one lesson to be learned. If you truly love someone don't hesitate to tell them, thank God I didn't. I couldn't be happier. No matter where life leads us may we be together forever.

Love Always,
Ralph

with all those times.
Our childhood was one of innocence
until we came to Beck. That was when we began to disconnect.
Now as seniors, our friendship is as strong as ever.
This time we know
it will never sever.

“And we’re back together again and I’m never gonna lose you as a friend.”
We wish you
joy, success,
happiness,
a lifetime
of love!
and -

May all your hopes & dreams of today -
Become your realities of tomorrow!

"It takes a lot of understanding, time, and trust to gain a close friendship with someone. As I approach a time of my life of complete uncertainty, my friends are my most precious asset."
Even though we haven't known each other for long we've definitely been through a lot. Boyfriend problems, school, friends, life and you name it, we have been there and done that. Because we are different in many ways, we benefit enormously from each other. Despite these existing differences, we share similarities as well. One main similarity is: WE LOVE TO PARTY! The one thing that we have always wanted to do was to go clubbing together, but whenever we make plans to go anywhere, we never go through with it! Maybe some other time. If you look at the three of us, we look pretty normal, but just stick us into a studio and you'll get a comedy! We'll never forget Alicia's giggling (she doesn't realize how funny it is) or Sonia declaring "I don't like you anymore" (even though she doesn't mean it). Sheryl will never give up singing Walt Disney tunes during lunch at the top of her lungs. Looking back, we've been through good and bad times, and during the bad times, we've been there for each other through thick and thin. When we get depressed, we try to think of the Spice Girls song "Shake It" or "Ladies Night" to cheer us up. These are all of the reasons as to why we call ourselves "Spice". Because spices come in hundreds of varieties like people, the "variety" in the three of us is what helps us learn more about ourselves and helps us better ourselves (we named ourselves just for fun and Sheryl was going to call herself molasses, but she didn't want any mean jokes made about her). We know our friendship will last a lifetime even though we may be far at times. This one is an everlasting one because of the wonderful memories, those memories that are simply "Unforgettable".
We are all proud of you for being as sweet and loving as you are.

We love you very much!

Do you remember
Many years ago
When we were young,
How we used to play together
Every day?

It seems like yesterday-
The childlike world
Of clowns and cotton candy
And summer days
That never seemed to end
When we played hide 'n' seek
From four o'clock till dusk
Then sat outside on someone's stoop
And listened to the crickets
And slapped away the mosquitoes
And talked about our dreams
And what we'd do when we grew up
Until our mothers called us in.

And do you remember
That one winter when it snowed
For days and days on end
And we tried to build an igloo
Like the Eskimos?
Or when we made a game
Of raking leaves
All up and down the street
Until we'd made the biggest pile
The world had ever seen
And then we jumped in it?
Or how about the time
We gathered honeysuckle
From your yard
And sold it to the neighbors?
And the grand day when finally
The training wheels came off our bikes
And we were free
To explore the whole world
In an afternoon
So long as we stayed
On our own street.

And I long once more
For the summer days
When I stood on your porch
And banged on your door
And bade you come outside to greet
The afternoon's adventures

Won't you come out to play, once more?
For we are still so young...
Ucky are we to have you as our daughter and sister.

Always will we burst with pride at your accomplishments.

Never waverin is our belief in your abilities.

Exciting are we in the milestone of your graduation.

Lately we feel about the remarkable young lady you are.

Ever will we stop loving you.

Dear Zara,

To my little sis,
Who I love a lot.
High School is over,
But your future is not.

Go meet it straight on,
With joy and good cheer.
Work hard and strive,
Because tomorrow draws near.

I know you can do it.
You have all the stuff,
That success is made of,
And beauty enough.

All my love,
Your sister,
Jessica

You're always there when I need a friend,
That's how I know this friendship will never end.
We are truly best friends,
Whenever we fight we make amends.
We have lots of memories we can share
Like all of the times we've dyed our hair.
When ever the world goes SQUAT SQUAT
You know just to laugh,
And to not get hurt.
Pit gave us something to do,
We hooked up with guys but we don't know who.
We've had lots of big shopping sprees,
And they were great fun because they were free.
We don't keep useless junk,
We dance better than Chunk the Funk.
Disney World was a blast,
And with that we memory we did cast.
No one wanted to meet us,
Until tigger finally did great us.
New York City was FANTASTIC!
But coming home at 7am was quite drastic.
Driving in Ocean City was not that great,
9th street is now the place Alyssa does hate.
The Junior Prom we will never forget,
Our dates were over 21 and alcohol they could get.
We had some thoughts down at Fisherman's Wharf,
But he never will know that larry dork.
To the vest coast was the Fix-A-Flat can,
Stef thought we would send it because he's in a band.
We got pierced when we were bored,
All we got charged was what we could afford.
Trips to the airport, they were divine,
Lucky for us it's not hard to find.
Concerts as always, they were the best,
For unmentionable reasons Pantera stands out above the rest.
Our friendship, we know, will always last,
And with these memories we will never forget our past.
Our senior year is soon over, with nothing to do,
Except to say I Love You, and Will Miss You!

It seems like only yesterday...

If I could put time in a bottle...

The first thing that I'd like to do is to save all those moments of happiness that I spent with you...

Dear Brian & Kevin,

You have brought such joy into our lives. From the day you both were born, the sun has been shining in my heart!

Your accomplishments in school and your “outside” activities have garnered many honors - but no awards are greater than attaining those of integrity, honor, trust and pride. In those you have soared to the highest levels. We are so proud of you! We love you - and you will always be in our hearts!

Love
Mom & Dad

But there never seems to be enough time... to do the things we want to do...

We gathered together as for the first time at the end of last year for a field trip to a Yearbook Conference. With creative ideas and new design techniques, we began the process of putting the pieces together of a book that would contain in its pictures and words the memories of our school.

The Yearbook Office came to life as we got down to business during the first minutes of homeroom. We commended ourselves on meeting the deadlines in time for dinner. The "Stick of Wisdom" was a prevalent force in the office as well as a useful tool in fixing the time on the wooden clock. We directed flustered seniors asking about handing in Best Friend Pictures and Senior Memories a week late to Mr. Carr.

Sharon Hwang, Diana Kang, Jamie Lauton, Howard Megdal, Annie Sting, Robin Bower, Arnold Luk, Jordan Springer, David Gadero, Vikram Palanivel, Shuo Chou, Brett Coppoll, Abby Harvey, Dan Chung, Brian Benn, Rafi Rom, Jael Woon, Sara Chvala, Crystal Wu, observing the consequences of the inquiry with excitement. Copy sheets littered the tables with captions, stories, lists of names, and, of course, hidden messages. The office rocked with music as we drew battle lines over who had dibs on the cropper and pica ruler. Candy was our major source of energy, keeping away stray students from entering our domain.

March 19 marked the last deadline. All that remained was the correction of proofs and the anticipation of "The Book". In the end, we worked our tails off and had fun at the same time. We now realize that creating Eidolon '98 was not only worthwhile in experience, but also rewarding in the friendships we made.
