Every moment contributes a part to the story of our lives. One special chapter concerns a building in a town known as Cheery Hill. Each day, people would come together at this meeting point to teach, learn, and enjoy. Little did they know that their years at this place would enrich them with memories and experiences beyond all expectations. This book is the story of that chapter. And so it goes ...
Carefully laying out her rough sketch of a portrait assignment in art class, Shantala Surya ('99) prepares her pencil drawing for the next phase: fine-tuning the details. Many students who take Mrs. Saccà's painting techniques class learn more from her method of taking several steps in the drawing process before doing the final copy. Surya said, "For art classes you need to be focused every day and ready to work. This class requires you to become spontaneously creative daily - even if it means putting your life on hold for forty-two minutes.

It's another day in biology lab where all sorts of challenging experiments take place. Jen Hur ('00) and Mike Gessman ('99) work together on a lab which requires students to construct "molecules" using various balls and sticks. Gessman, who loves biology class, said, "If you put in the time for the class, you'll get rewarded."

As Jennie Sheinman ('99) looks down to take another bite of her sandwich, she feels refreshed already. Eating healthy is a great factor in surviving through the long day at East since it provides the energy necessary to withstand the rest of the day.

Zoom, Focus, Click. Taking a good photo takes more than just a simple point-and-shoot of the camera. Before shooting the picture, there are a series of other steps that one must take to get a good photo. Jerry Levine ('99), a student in Mr. Kovan's Advanced Photography class, said, "If you don't get your ideas in focus, then you just can't get everything to click. But once it does, the hard work seems just like a snap."

Working feverishly in the auditorium before her school picture, Gabrielle Abrams ('02) finishes up the last couple of math problems before the period ends. Although most students will not admit it, many leave their homework for the next day, knowing that they can catch a few snippets of free time throughout the following day. Although everybody tries to avoid this kind of procrastination, it still seems to be a part of everyday life.
East provides a rigorous curriculum and many opportunities, helping students with various needed skills. In order to keep up with assignments and information given out everyday, students put their full effort into academics, and at the same time expose themselves to new ideas and career possibilities. Through hard work, extra effort, and motivation, students try their best to achieve their goals for the future. Whether they turn out to be businessmen, famous celebrities, or even Presidents, everyone manages to juggle all of the required courses and the additional electives to satisfy their thirst for knowledge, and of course, have fun.

East exposes students to a range of careers. After freshman, sophomore, and junior years draw to a close, they realize that they must soon make a decision. As students get closer and closer to college, they gain a better sense of what they want to do with their lives. By the end of senior year, most students have gotten into college and feel more in control of their futures.

Although still a student, Sophia Rigatos ('01), knows what she wants out of life. "I want to become a music producer because music is my passion. To prepare for college and my career, I am taking Vocal Workshop, Concert Choir, and guitar lessons on the side. I guess I just keep pushing myself so that my dreams will come true."

Annie Shing ('00) also takes advantage of the challenging courses, which ultimately help her plan ahead. "Basically, my current work load, although it may be a lot, prepares me for the future. For me, the honors classes at East force me to learn how to balance my academic workload with my social life and still wind up with the results that I want for myself. It's great practice for the future."

In addition to the French instruction students receive at school, they can also travel to France for a deeper cultural experience. During a free period, Lindsay McGinnis ('99) plans an upcoming trip with Mrs. Sokolow. Both students and teachers eagerly welcome any supplements to the required curriculum, which always later prove to be educational and fun.

The band room fills with music as Asher Ross ('02) plays his tuba in the direction of Mr. Kelleher, the director. Freshman Wind Ensemble meets everyday during first period to rehearse for their upcoming performances. In addition to dedicating himself to the class everyday, Ross practices regularly to get the results he wants. "You have to try your best because if you don't, you'll end up looking bad," said Ross.

Taking full advantage of the computers in the library, Andrea Natelson ('02), Caesare Asbery ('00), and Alexandra Herson ('00) research for an upcoming project during study hall. They use the helpful Internet service to gain a better understanding of their subjects. Putting in extra work into acquiring information not only provides future knowledge but also helps with the assignment.
"Time? What time? Aaaah!" Such is the rallying cry of stressed and exploited East students. One often sees them, complete with bloodshot eyes and large coffee mugs, dragging themselves down the hallway. As more students attempt to increase their workload, more complain of the lack of time for all of their activities. "Students expect to handle all their work. It's actually more than we're able to get done," said Dave Newman ('00).

Although they realize that time is limited, students continue to accept a heavy workload, Derek McMahon ('99), who can relate to the situation, said. "There's so much to do that it seems as if I need more than that I really have." Like most students, he cuts into his time for sleep in order to get everything done. As the school year progresses, the inevitable lack of sleep becomes more apparent, indicated by the increasingly heavy book bags and eyes.

Only a miracle can save us all from this plague. Suggesting a complete overhaul of the system of time, Jenny Chang ('00) said. "I think it would be really quite helpful if the 24 hour days were extended. Then maybe, just maybe, I could get all my work done." The prolonged days would give students just enough time to finish all their work. Well, that's only if nobody procrastinates, a miracle by itself.

Overall, as students find themselves stuck with more work and less time, they tend to agree with Jeff Su ('99) who claims, "Time is like money - you can never have enough of it."

Like many other students who have extracurricular activities, Peter Ro ('00) needs to find time during the day to review his academic work. "Because school is so demanding, I have almost no time to study. So, I need to go over my notes between classes," said Ro.

Browsing through pictures from elementary school, Nikki Jay ('99) and Sara Kellerman ('99) smile with nostalgia. Time seems to have flown by as they remember the good times of those days when simplicity was a way of life. In the few short years since then, so much has already happened in their lives ranging from new friends to new experiences.

Reviewing the artwork in her class, Alexis Ramos ('00) pays partial attention to the details of each painting. This tedious process requires each student to put extensive time and effort into the work. The dedication results in an admirable piece of art that satisfies both the artist and the audience. According to Ramos, "Art is a good way to express your feelings in an individual and unique way."
and Anne Cohen (’99) prepare a piece for the Winter Concert. The work results in an intriguing performance. It all starts in D-wing, where singers and instrumentalists practice every day. The talented students donate much of their time to their groups to produce a finished product. Cohen said, “Spare time? What spare time? What is spare time?”

Seniors like Eli Bramhilla (’99) work hard throughout high school to attend a college of their choice. Sometimes, however, they need advice on the really difficult decisions. So, they go to their guidance counselor for quick and helpful advice.

Pietro Dumore (’99) concentrates on making the student’s hair quaint in the limited amount of time she has during cosmetology. Since styling beautiful hair takes longer than most people expect, she puts in extra practice during class. “I make everyone’s hair prettier one person at a time, ” says Dumore.

Work, work, work. Every student experiences a time in high school when they have no time to do anything but study. Like most students, Wynn Williamson (’99) and Dina Reed try to ease the workload by studying together for exams. As senior year progresses, the number of responsibilities increase, making work more difficult. “Working with other people alleviates stress,” Reed said.

Jean Kang (’01) listens patiently as her Communications teacher comments on the contents of her English essay which is in her second language. It isn’t always easy for newcomers from another country to understand everything in school, but the effort put forth to comprehend the surroundings makes a big difference. Said Kang, “Since I didn’t come that long ago, English and getting used to living here is very hard, but people are all very nice and helpful. So far, I’m having fun.”

So Much To Do, So Little Time
Melissa Eisenmenger ('00) and Dan Kent ('00) talk briefly before they must hurry to their separate classes. Although the crowd of students rushing by may be irritating, they find the simple presence of a friend quite soothing. "I take advantage of the time between classes to talk with friends because it helps relieve stress and academic pressures," said Eisenmenger.

Mike Damiani ('01) spend their lunch period discussing any and every subject. By talking, they are able to become closer friends, learning to understand each other better. Besides, being friends allows them to relax during an otherwise hectic school day. Said G zest: "I like to take time out of lunch to talk with friends. It helps me through the day."

Sharing their snacks, Michelle Polansky ('01) and Amanda Scarna ('01) believe that food tastes better when eaten with a friend. By experiencing different things together, friends not only gain experience to remember but also grow closer. "Friendship is just another word for the sharing of secrets, wishes, and anything else friends have to offer," said Polansky.

Discovering that their friend Bob Brangan ('99) has broken his wrist, Desiree Sorensen ('00) and Melissa Zegans ('00) hurry over to sympathize with him, trying to help in any way possible. Through the traditional "signing of the cast," they express their hope that he feels better soon. Times of adversity or pain reveal true friends while also creating new ones.
For Better Or Worse

We meet many people during our four years at East. Unfortunately, many times, they exit our lives as quickly as they enter it. However, some stay with us. We get to know them, and as we grow, our relationships do so. We call these people our friends.

There are many types of “friends.” Some are “school friends,” the people we only get to see in class and maybe occasionally outside of school. They help us through the rigors of each school day. There are also friends who we spend time with outside of school, going to the mall or the movies. They are the people we spend hours on the phone with and the ones we can lean on when the going gets tough. Whether we see them in or outside of school, friends are still important and precious. Without them, we would be lost in this chaotic time of our lives called adolescence.

Fate has the most intriguing way of bringing friends together. Some people become best friends at a very young age, while others have to wait until much later in life. There are no universal laws for friendship, only unexplainable forces. No two of these “forces” are the same, for what attracts two people to each other could repel another two. This force is like a life. It starts out weak and vulnerable. But, as time passes, it becomes stronger and binds the friends together. Even if they later encounter obstacles such as differing schedules or distance, these friends find a way to unite, in person or in soul. In the end, each person finds a piece of himself in every person he meets. According to Dan Berg (’00), this happens because “friends ultimately decide how you change and who you are.”

Practicing their latest musical piece during East Singers, Dan Berg (’00) and Dave Marenelli (’00) focus on mastering this new song. That students are able to help each other learn makes singing all the more fun. Dan Berg said, “Music is a great way to release stress and meet new friends.”

The cafeteria resounds with shouts around Ryan Weinstein (’00), Gregory Markus (’00), Charlie Snyder (’00), and Brooke Urish (’00) during the ultimate Spirit Week event the milk-drinking contest. This table of good friends in particular rings with cheers, providing another memory of the students’ high school experience. Urish, who will hold these memories forever, said, “My friends are always there for me - in school, on the weekends, and everywhere else.”

As Perry Brenner (’02), Catherine Koldoy (’02), Taylor Mach (’02), Meredith Minoff (’02), and Daniel Janoff (’02), eagerly crowd around Communication to find out why they were called down, they greet each other and Mrs. Correia. Chance meetings like this allow students to see friends they wouldn’t normally see during the course of a day. “Keeping in touch with people is important because otherwise you lose friendships that dissolve over time,” said Jon Roth (’99).
As a mental image of the ideal shot forms in his mind, Gerry Levin ('99) refocuses his camera for the next shot. Despite common misconceptions, photography is not just a point-and-click hobby. For photography students, it is an art form that requires patience, knowledge, and a great deal of creativity. It allows them to express themselves in a unique fashion which accentuates each student's individuality.

In a school as big as East, a student will have trouble finding his or her identity. Each student must find it, identifying himself or herself at East. "Yeah, the school is big, but you find your niche. I personally have several. Everyone has several different aspects to their personality. Because I'm involved in so many things I can explore each aspect of my personality," said Elizabeth Livingston ('99).

Students may find their identity by trying out the school activities. Finding this personal identity, however, is difficult and a rather long process. Students may not even find it or find it only after a long time just as Jane Kim ('99). "For the past three years of high school, I've been trying to figure out who I am and just attempting to figure out who I am has been kind of painful at times, but I've

The classroom is quiet for a change as Mike Brand ('99) confers with his teacher for an after-school conference. Many times the class period is too short for teachers to give individual attention to students' questions. Staying after benefits both the teacher and student since they finally have the time to concentrate on certain problems. "It is very nice of teachers to take time out of their busy schedules to help out the students that need help," said Brand.

While concentrating on his music, Tom Principato ('00) ponders about who he really is. Many students at East, build up a facade that paradoxes their true personality. A complex issue for all, the issue of identity, plagues the minds of students everywhere.

Talking quickly, Lila Buchalski ('01) makes an urgent phone call during time between classes. The five minutes give just enough time for her to run the short errands that she ordinarily would not be able to do while in class.
Every morning before homeroom, students rush to their lockers, crowding the hallways and making the ability to walk almost impossible. Although the overwhelming mass of people hinders movement, students manage to get to homeroom on time, realizing the consequences of being late. "Getting through all the people in the halls before homeroom is really hard because you have to shove your way through, but sometimes I bump into someone I like," said Rachel Solomon (’01).

Practicing his drawing techniques, Brandon Ransey (’01) uses a model from an art book to help release his creative energies. He is one of many art students at East who pursues their dreams of becoming a renowned artist through the many art courses offered. For some students, art is an escape from reality, but for most it is really.

Just begun to realize that I’m alone in this world, no one person or friend is going to be with me all the time so I don’t really have a set group of friends in which I can be classified because we are all moving in a different direction,” she said.

One’s identity is something each student must discover. It may be easy or hard, painless or painful, but we must still go through this process either way.

During the five minutes between classes, Brett Berman (’99) and Blake Rudow (’00) stop at their lockers to grab a few books. Even though students are usually in a hurry at this time, trips to their lockers are an essential part of everyday life. Not only do they get a relieving break between rigorous classes but they also allow students to have a little time to chat. Rudow said, "Five minutes might be enough time to get to class, but other than that a quick "what’s up" and stop at your locker, you don’t have time to do anything else.”

A flurry of activity, the cafeteria encompasses a multitude of students during lunch. Those who go only to eat scarf down as much food as possible while others spend the whole time just chatting. The procrastinators race through the homework due next period while their counterparts, the slackers, refuse to do any work at all. All in all, lunch provides a momentary escape from academic classes in which students for once, may do as they please.

Sanctuary From The Classroom

Five minutes. That’s all the time that East students have between each period. These precious five minutes are usually insufficient for students to do everything they want to do. “Five minutes is not enough time to accomplish these everyday little things such as chatting with friends or going to a locker, and with more people hanging around in the hallways, it’s harder to get to class,” said Vince Sust (’99).

Since students use every crucial minute, they are forever running out of time. At times it does not even feel that the full five minutes are given. “Those five precious minutes, three hundred seconds, are not enough time between classes. Last year I had a stop watch and on certain days there would only be four minutes instead of five. It messed me up very much because it’s a whole minute away from my destination,” said Jeff Hwang (’99).

Most East students use their minutes to talk with their friends, usually rushing to class in the last minute. “I go to my locker, but when I pass a friend I have a quick chat and then make a run to my next class,” said Jen Kim (’00). Ari Butler (’99) has a much more relaxed schedule. “For the first 4 minutes I talk with my friends and the last minute I need to sprint to my next class.”

However, there are those East students that have classes far apart, barely reaching class on time. The enormous mass of students in the hallway does not help at all. “My classes are in the opposite sides of the school so I run to each class. I try to push through to talk to my friends for a brief amount of time,” said Elizabeth Livingston (’99). Although the five minutes that we get seem very hectic it is literally only a small part of a typical day at East.

Dan DiBruno (’99) and Brett Berman (’99) use their lunch as a break from academic pressures. Lunch is one of the only periods of the day when students can stop concentrating on school. Along with eating, they can also relax with friends.

During class, a few students talk in the hallway and get things from their lockers. In the confusion of the five minutes between classes, sometimes students forget things for class and go back to their lockers to obtain class material but sometimes students just need a break of air.
On her way to lunch, Hilary Ettinson ('99) stops by her locker with her friend Nikki Freedman ('99) to gather books for her upcoming classes. Before leaving for the cafeteria, they linger to discuss the grade level passed, wondering why it was sent. Students often use their time between classes to not only visit their lockers but also to chat with friends. Ettinson said, "Because we have five minutes between classes, I actually have time to stop by my locker as well as saying "hi" to my friends that I don't get to see in my classes."

At the end of a long day, Christine Madden ('99) tries to decide what to take home. Many students must decide how to divide their work and so they are not pressured to do everything at the last minute. By planning ahead, students can avoid procrastination.

Catching up on the latest gossip, Julia Elouss ('99) and Leigh Gromadzyn ('99) step in the hallway for a quick conversation. With only five minutes in between classes, students don't have much of a chance to inhale after going from their lockers and to their next class. C-wing is the most congested hallway and the wing where most of the students go to find their friends. Throughout the day, a series of hall monitors watch the students as they go to their classes.
While Amber Allison ('00) continues to plow through the infamous High School Proficiency Test, Yuriy Korsky ('00), done for the time being, opts to relax from the rigorous testing. As a statewide mandatory test, the HSPT's represent 9 hours of basic math, reading, and writing exams. For most students, the HSPT's are a welcome break from the daily monotonous schedule.

As an experienced chemistry teacher, Ms. Hirnichen understands the techniques necessary to create an effective learning environment. In order to make the class more informative yet interesting, she teaches by leading an open discussion which engages students in concentration. Active participation, as opposed to dull memorization, encourages the student to fully comprehend the lesson.

While Frank Chang ('00) concentrates on his last test question, he tries to forget about the clock ticking on the wall. Not all students are capable of keeping focus under testing conditions, but as they grow accustomed to more and more tests, they learn skills applicable to midterms, finals, and even SAT's. Chang said, "Although the test was challenging, long hours of studying prepared me to answer the questions with confidence.

Although hesitant with inexperience, Charles O'Brien ('99) and Lindsay Leitch ('00) dissect a shark in their Vertebrate Anatomy class. By examining the shark hands-on, the students learn more about the creature than they ever could in a textbook. Also, the process of dissection imparts a lasting impression which helps them better understand the lab.
"There is no end to the amount of work I have. When I finish one thing, there are always two other things waiting to take its place." Shuo Ju Chou ('99)

Infinite is the description of the workload at East, as any student might claim. During the grueling 7 A.M. to 2:25 P.M. school day, the exhausting academic schedules requiring every student to exert all energy to the numerous tasks at hand. For this reason alone, the ring of the final bell is a welcome sign supposedly indicating the end of the intense effort.

The day, however, does not end with a simple ring of a bell. After school, students often find themselves sitting in the cafeteria, working on a group project or they stay to hurriedly get after school help with a teacher, before making up a lab in the science wing.

Once home, students might catch a quick catnap or relax around the house. Yet, the inevitable load of books, despite their activities, still waits on their desks.

Turning on their lamps, students might prepare to start their homework. Pencils ready in hand, they sit down and focus their concentration. Tonight, East hits the books.

As they create models out of individual wooden pieces, Sarah Cho ('00) and Diane Blank ('00) are able to visualize the complex nature of molecular structures. The labs provide an exciting approach toward learning considering students are eager to confirm their hypotheses. Cho said, "Cell Phys is unlike any other science course because it emphasizes hands-on learning with all the lab opportunities such as learning about cell structures with tinker toys.

Allison Bernstein ('01) takes notes profusely as the class goes over the day's Spanish lesson. Class exercises allow teachers to make sure their students understand the material. Students also benefit since a thorough comprehension of the lesson makes tests and homework easier while making the entire learning process more enjoyable.

School Work 15
Bill Deal ('99) admires a drawing as he hangs it in the school showcase. There are many opportunities to find yourself here at East, including the art department. Of the various classes for vocal, instrumental, and acting talents, there is art. Through their creative abilities, students express themselves and form an inviting look for the school. Although the classes are limited, many students manage to find themselves relaxing in art class, creating a work of art respected and appreciated by the school community.

The comfort of a car ride easily overshadows the convenient availability of a bus. Seizing the opportunity for a ride home, Devon Searles ('00) prefers the relaxation of a car to the mayhem associated with public transportation. Besides, the ride takes her directly home, avoiding the countless pauses at bus stops.

TIME TO KILL

Throughout the school year, students find themselves so overwhelmed with schoolwork that they neglect the other side of school—social life. For many seniors this year, applying to college is not just about an exemplary academic record. Rather, during the interview and recommendation process, admissions officers evaluate the student's ability to get along with others as well. East plays a major role in helping students with this skill. East cultivates an atmosphere which promotes social interaction. This relational involvement with others allows students to hone their own interpersonal skills. Dan Reed ('99), who was much more shy when he was a freshman, now has changed to a more sociable person. “East’s promotion of cooperative learning taught me the social skills necessary for success in life,” said Reed. Requiring students to manage both school and social activities, the atmosphere imparts a sense of balance which encourages a healthier lifestyle. Genevieve LaFerriere ('00), who believes that East has helped her, said, “I've learned how to balance my social life with my schoolwork.” Another student who learned from East's social environment, Dave Gadren ('00) feels no pressure to label his relationships with people. “Everybody's friends here. Once you see how many nice people there are, it’s easier to become one yourself,” Gadren said.

As usual, Mr. Belchikoff, the activities coordinator, is surrounded by students. Activities at East give students the chance to take control and apply their knowledge. “Activities are such a big part of life at East. Students make each club and activity come alive. Mr. Belchikoff is one of those people who help to get our ideas out to the rest of the student body,” said Leslie Fabello ('99).

Clint Williams ('99) flips through a financial aid guide packet, looking at opportunities to alleviate tuition costs. With the ever-increasing cost of college many students turn to state-funded financial aid as a criterion in deciding on a college. Guidance counselors such as Mr. Borchers help East students make the right decisions for the future.
Snyder ('00) and David Lawrence ('00) admire their hard work. Photography provides a unique approach to artistic expression through the technical process of creating pictures. The course teaches students the many methods used in the developing process.

Sitting in Cafeteria I after school, Ashley Getson ('00) attempts to do math homework. It is a rare occasion since most students cannot concentrate when they stay after school. Also, more and more students stay after school to catch up with friends because they don't have time during the school day.

As Megan Kelly ('00) walks toward her next class, she stops to socialize with her best friend, Dave Wolbach ('00). Socializing is a daily part of a student's life. "The best thing about school is socializing in the hallway and ending up late to class," said Kelly.

Zonked out after studying for a major test, a student sleeps on the table in front of the "Go East" sign. Many students stay up late the night before a big test, but when they come into school the next day, they can't stay awake.
With huge crowds cheering both sides on, the Junior and Senior girls played not only for their own pride, but the pride of their respective classes. Though the screams and chants from the sidelines added fuel to the fire of class spirit, little could stand in the way of the class of '99 doing a repeat.

As one of the many activities of Spirit Week, musical chairs invites students from all classes to a rowdy game which both participants and bystanders enjoy. The competition and all-around fun of these types of activities gives students an opportunity to find entertainment in an otherwise routine day.

Being a devoted fan sometimes requires unbridled dedication, even in dreary weather. A real fan braves wind, rain, and snow. Mud is no exception, either. Heavy rains cannot keep loyal East students from attending the annual Homecoming game.

Niki Jay ('99) dashes toward the end zone in the annual Powder Puff football game. Since Powder puff requires strategy, only with a lot of skill and a little bit of luck, can the Juniors or Seniors succeed at this rigorous game.

The West Lion and the East Cougar wave to an excited crowd at the annual homecoming game. As an integral part of school spirit, mascots strive to entertain their audience in order to help energize them.
East Rocks Our World

High school is all about the memories. Whether it's a wonderful night at the senior prom or a thrill-filled basketball game, East students take a unique collection of memories with them when they leave home for college. In order to give everyone the opportunity to participate and enjoy the nonacademic activities that East has to offer, the Student Government Association organizes a multitude of school-sponsored events. Students have many events to choose from, such as Powder Puff, Homecoming, or any of the various dances that SGA organizes. Not only do these activities allow students to have fun, but they also give the SGA members a chance to gain the experience of organizing and working together to make an event happen. Instead of putting all of the responsibilities upon Mr. Belchikoff and the Activities department, students take part in the planning and preparation. "SGA activities are fun and often very well planned," said Katie Bleaken ('99).

Under the guidance of their football coaches, the Junior and Senior girls are put to the test in the annual Powder Puff game. Having won as juniors, this year's Seniors had the advantage of a prior victory. By putting their honed athletic skills into use, the class of '99 seniors finishes off with a perfect record of 2-0.

Kevin Sinacker ('00) and Paimaan Lodhi ('00) demonstrate school spirit by participating in Spirit Week events. To many students Spirit Week is a worthy way to be involved in school activities while also having fun.
Healthy Diversion

Life is hard for the average high school student. There are endless hours of lecturing to endure, hopeless piles of homework to do, and of course, the occasional test that seemingly requires a superhuman cramming ability. Even honors students feel the pressure of being in the academically stressful environment of East. So what do they do? Even the most attentive students have their lapses. Sleeping, talking or just daydreaming are all ways to tune out that endless lesson about the anatomy of the fetal pig. Graphing calculators are another innovation in the art of classroom entertainment. With the onslaught of the digital revolution, students can now purchase high-tech gadgets capable of storing physics equations as well as games. Students find still more ways to fight the monotony of classes, however. Note-passing, formerly an ancient ritual practiced in middle school, is still popular among students tired of listening to the history of the Great Depression. This, and countless other fidgeting and scribbling activities all keep students entertained, and most importantly, refreshed for their next class.

Jeff Wang ('00) approaches Adam Fang ('00) in an attempt to surprise him with a poke on the neck during their Biology lab. Since the double-period class often seems to endure without end, classmates often resort to any entertaining tactic that provides a diversion from the routine of the lab.

In a common gesture of confusion, Rich Eisenberg ('01) scratches his head to signal his impending boredom. Along with the muffled yawn and slouched shoulders, the slow scratch implies to teachers that they must liven the lesson in order to avoid losing the attention of their students.

With their busy schedules, Jeff Wang ('00), Srdjan Vukovic ('00), and Mike Chuang ('00) have little time to socialize. Since one of the few chances students have to chat with friends occurs during the five precious minutes between periods, most consider being late to their next class worth the consequences.
Finding a spare minute in her Biology class, Annie Chang ('00) spends time with Lauren Marlowe ('00) to discuss their plans for the weekend. Though the class may become routine, the two take comfort in the fact that they will always have a friend in class to talk to.

Kelly Hunt ('00) paints her project during her 3D Art class, expressing her creativity through her work. Though many classes encourage the intellectual side of a student, art courses both teach and amuse its students. The classmates can find fun through doing what they enjoy and do best.

Dozing off is yet another choice available to students bored in class. Scott Lermack ('99) dreams away his boredom during Woodshop as he takes full advantage of his time during class to catch up on some extra sleep.
Free From Classrooms

Everyone knows what East has to offer as a school — the classes, electives, and clubs are famous for their variety. However, besides learning indoors, students do many things outdoors as well. Aside from waiting for the buses, many students have constructed their own activities outside of the school. During a typical lunch period, one often sees a lively game of hackey-sack going on in the courtyard. This game is very popular among East students, and competitive rounds take place during and after school. Depending on the weather, students also play a variety of different sports on East’s grassy “lawn.” Everything from a game of catch to a casual volleyball game have graced the vast field in front of the auditorium. Of course, there will always be those clusters of students waiting for rides, and those groups that huddle under the cool shade of the trees just outside of the D-wing entrance.

Brett Coppol ('99), Lindsay Levin ('00), and Lauren Feigenbaum ('00) exchange a quick goodbye before leaving school. Often, students do not have time to chat with friends during school. Leaving only the little time remaining at the end of the day.

Finally done all their work, Tom Caruso ('00), Justin Marciani ('00), and Paaiman Lodhi ('00) hop in the car and prepare to leave another day of school behind them. The moment students walk out of the school doors, they can breathe easier, realizing that they are one day closer to summer vacation.

KABOOM ...

Students waited outside as the Camden County Bomb Squad searched the building. Despite the gravity of the situation, Jordan Rael ('99) and Brandon Fox ('02) are among the many students who took advantage of the free time to chat with friends and relax.
After a long, hard day trudging through the halls of Cherry Hill East, Chris Savcek ('99) and Neel Adhikari ('99) prepare to depart for home. One of the best advantages of senior year is the availability of ready transportation.

Wasting no time, Rafi Rom ('99), David Newman ('00), Aviva Buchman ('00), Nadya Lev ('01), and Amanda Wild ('99) leave school in hopes of finding more enjoyable activities to do. The long day spent cooped up in a classroom leaves many students longing for the freedom outside the building.

As they wait outside in the parking lot, students observe the havoc caused by the bomb scare. The confusion caused by the threat disrupted school schedules, allowing students to roam around in search of something with which to occupy themselves.

Pepco Jimenez ('00) covers his ears to keep warm while standing by the parking lot during the bomb scare. Though the bomb scare took place on the coldest days of the winter, many students did not have jackets while waiting for the police to search the building, risking both health and comfort.

Finished for the day, Andrew Schwerin ('00) prepares to drive David Schwerin ('02) and Craig Slotkin ('02) home. Though most students take the bus, many still covet the car-ride home with an upperclassman. The direct drive home not only eliminates the time wasted at bus stops but also offers more comfort than public transportation.

Life Outside
Greeting each other like they do everyday, Adam Lambert ('99) and Scott Lermack ('99) exchange a few words in the hallway before going home. Many students meet with their friends in the same area each day.

Reviewing for an upcoming test, Howard Chang ('00) stays after school to get help on his Physics homework. Since many students miss classes, talking to teachers after school helps them understand the work they have missed.

Standing and talking in the C-wing intersection, Terry Srazzullo ('00), Joseph Croce ('00), Jeff Morse ('00), and Brett Basara ('00) create a traffic jam. Students that block the flow of traffic between classes slow everyone down and prevent many others from getting to class on time.

As they share a book for class, Laura Andrew ('99) and Katie Bleakin ('99) follow their teacher's reading during yet another lesson. Since they attend class everyday, the work becomes somewhat routine, asking the same demands all the time. However, the two continue to remain active in their studies as they pay attention in class despite being seniors.

During one of Mr. Simon's lectures, Shou Ju Chou ('99) and his classmates pay close attention. Even during senior year, many of the students continue to work hard until graduation. After hundreds of days in high school, coming into a classroom and writing down notes have become part of a student's daily routine.
As the graduating class prepares for the challenging beginning of a new phase in their lives, many seniors are feeling the first pangs of nostalgia. Yearbooks, proms, and a slew of other activities have all provided this year's graduates with plenty of memories of their four years at East. Perhaps the most memorable aspect of East was the social life that thrives daily in the hallways and cafeterias. This year's freshmen are just being introduced to the varied people who come together to make up East's diverse student body. Kaushik Ganguly ('99) said, "These four years at East has given me the opportunity to meet some very special people who made it all worthwhile." Whether it is just passing by acquaintances in between classes or hanging out with friends after school in the cafeteria, students at East are a part of a special social fabric. It is so unique mainly because of the fact that the relatively small size of the school brings students of different nationalities, religions, and backgrounds together all into one building every day. Unlike the large campuses of many colleges and universities, East gives students a chance to meet various people along the same corridors. High school is a unique experience for everyone — and the special social life at East is no exception.

A few minutes before the bell rings, Mike Sica ('02) sneaks a sly glance out into the hall. After confirming that the coast is clear, he slips out to go to lunch early. Students often take advantage of the few precious minutes at the end of the period to escape their interminable classes.
HELPING HANDS

Almost everyone knows about the Peace Corps, UNICEF and the Red Cross — all are organizations comprised of volunteers working for a better world. Pessimistic teenagers may scoff at what impact all these organizations may have on the world, but the fact is, people can make a difference. How do students at East heed the call of goodwill? Popular clubs such as FOP, Blood Drive and AIDS Awareness are all student-organized groups which focus on helping others through volunteer work. Adopt-A-Grandparent, a club which centers on teenagers reaching out to the senior citizens of the community, is yet another organization at East which encourages the spirit of volunteer work. Even though a lot of hard work is included, students involved in the annual FOP Christmas Party also learn valuable lessons about the power of reaching out to strangers. "I think FOP is a great activity because I interact with people that I don’t usually deal with on a daily basis. And I love seeing the little kids smile and enjoy themselves," Sona Kothari ('00), an FOP chairperson, said. Perhaps the best reward from reaching out to others is how we emerge, beautified, by the gift of giving.

Many students including Erica Grabski ('00) and Ben Witten ('00) volunteer their time for Adopt-A-Grandparent to brighten a senior citizen’s day. Through socializing and interacting with students on their free time, the seniors are able to make new friends while giving sage advice. Along with recognition of participating in the program, the students also acquire a personal satisfaction of making someone feel needed.

Arnold Luk ('99), Matt Pollock ('99) and Rabi Rom ('99) encourage Richa Verma ('99) to sign petitions to help oppressed victims throughout the world. Amnesty International advocates human rights as they try to involve the student body in their cause. This fervent railing encourages other students to respect the rights of their peers both in and out of school.

Discussing the upcoming meeting, Steve Decina ('99), David Cohen ('00), and Jay Joyce ('00) gather together with Mr. Moehlman at Communications. Like the many other language and culture clubs, the German American Club introduces students to ethnic heritage. These groups bring together many people of different backgrounds to learn and have fun.

The Spanish Club draws students of all languages by its effective mixture of culture and entertainment. The club's holiday party integrates these two elements through the Mexican tradition of the piñata. Paimaan Lodhi ('00) finds that learning of new cultures is always made easier with the incentive of fun and games.
Culture Clubs continue to attract students due to their unifying environment. To officers Erica Eas ('00) and Karen Wolodo ('00), the Irish American Club provides a way for a variety of students to come together and socialize as a whole group. Though a single unit, members still maintain their individuality, creating a harmonious blend with the culture club.

In hopes of raising funds for French Club, Laura Delledro ('00) and Alicia Bertels ('00) satisfy hungry students with crossants after school. Many clubs decide to sell popular foods in order to make money in order to support club-oriented activities. They position themselves where crowds are busiest - C-wing intersection and in front of the auditorium - to lure in potential customers.

According to Santosh Vardhana (99), "The purpose of ICS is to spread awareness of Indian culture to everyone, not just to Indians." In order to accomplish this goal, he and fellow officer Ankur Patel (101) discuss activities they can pursue, such as their first involvement in the Lunar Banquet, with their advisor, Mr. Haines. They hope that these activities will encourage students to learn not only about Indian culture but about other ones as well.

Like other culture clubs, the African American Club emphasizes the importance of heritage. However, it also promotes a sense of unity within the students like Angelene Hayes (100), Tia Brown (09), Roberto West (02), Jaimee Phillips (02), Kristian Pelto-grew (02), Candyce Muns (00), through meetings that encourage their interaction and input in cultural discussions.

Gail Sweeney ('01) takes part in a demonstration for Students Against Drunk Driving. A visiting officer from the Cherry Hill Police Department shows Sweeney, along with the rest of the SADD members, how alcohol can affect one's ability to perform routine daily functions.

Stephanie Miller ('99) writes the schedule for an AIDS Awareness Meeting on the chalkboard. These meetings inform students about current developments on the disease while encouraging them to participate in local fundraisers to raise money for AIDS research.

AIDS AWARENESS: Rachel Singer (President), Joo Mi Kim (VP), Judy Wu (Treasurer), Megha Patel (Community), Gloria Faring (Publicity), Lauren Adelman, Ellen Corcoran, Julie Hy, Michelle Magallon, Melissa Medoway, Stephanie Miller, Diana Tang, Josh Varen, Sammy Zweber. Advisor: Mrs. Gardner.
Activism is what makes East part of the community. Students participate in a wide variety of awareness-related activities geared to help their community and even the world. These clubs promote awareness and give students an opportunity to voice their opinions and help others.

Amnesty International is a club that helps promote human rights in third world countries. Rafi Rom ('99), president of Amnesty, said, "I feel that in our school and the community, not enough people know what is going on in the world and never try to take direct action in helping. With Amnesty, we work hard to raise awareness, and have everybody at least sign their name to a petition so they are doing something."

Another popular awareness club is TOPS. The students involved devise different ways to spread the word about the dangers of smoking at the local elementary and middle schools. Though it is geared for younger children, the TOPS program also promotes understanding in the club members through its informatively focused meetings.

Students Against Drunk Driving, commonly known as SADD, warns others of the dangers of driving while intoxicated. By teaching such an important message, the group ultimately helps save the lives of the community.

By being aware of the world around them, students learn important activism issues. Through this awareness, students have the assertiveness to know that they can make a difference.

Adam Rubin ('00) and Rachel Cetel ('00) look over an agenda for Gay-Straight Alliance. Through this type of awareness club, students can share their opinions on various topics. The club meetings provide an open environment in which students can discuss and plan club activities.

Rachael Singer ('99) reads a letter from the AIDS Research Center thanking the club for its participation in a recent AIDS Walk. Members try and involve themselves in as many fundraisers as possible.

Brain Power

Like sports, academic clubs give students opportunities to get involved in extracurricular activities that are both competitive and demanding. Activities such as science leagues, JSA, Mock Trial, and Certamen are all clubs that provide competitive atmospheres for their members through testing students' abilities in various areas. Just like East's athletes, club members must prepare diligently ahead of time so that they will be ready on the critical day of competition. Maureen Stolzer ('00), a member of Certamen, said, "Like in sports, we compete against different schools. To succeed, we really need team effort."

For example, East's Debate team resembles athletic through its participation in weekly competitions during their debate season. Though often working late into the night, both Junior Varsity and Varsity debaters relish the thrill of winning competitions. Robin Bose ('99), a Varsity debater agrees that debate can parallel sports. "We compete in the heat of the moment, yet our hours of practice and dedication are the foundation of our championship teams," said Bose.

Although Junior Statesmen of America usually deals with political rather than physical leverage, Peter Lembesis ('99) and Jake Fienenberg ('01) don't mind trading brains for brawn. JSA offers a members place to discuss issues in a meaningful way. "Arm wrestling is a metaphor for what we love to do in JSA," said we love to tangle with each other," said.

The pressure of a chess game equals that of any sports game, though it may result in mental rather than physical exhaustion. While practicing strategy after school with Mr. Grasso, Ben Zhou ('02) and Lev Reznov ('01) refine their skills in chess, thus resembling athletes during intense practice.

Asif Syal ('00) prepares for a Mock Trial competition. During the course of the season, participants learn how to examine witnesses, formulate opening and closing statements, and make objections. Also, members learn how to think quickly on their feet, while gaining a sense of confidence.

Soumen Samaddar (’99) checks his answers for the month’s Biology II Science League test as the advisor. Mr. Keller provides an explanation for each question. The Science League prepares for these tests through meetings where students review old tests and learn new material.

Practicing a speech for the Debate Team, Robin Bose (’99) offers his stance on the topic at hand to Minh Ly (’00) and Deb Sarkar (’99). Sharing viewpoints with teammates allows them to provide constructive criticism and help strengthen the argument.

As Sara D'Alessandro ('00) offered Sam Katz ('00) some candy, she succeeds in spreading another smile in honor of RAK week. Random Acts of Kindness members give themselves the daily responsibility of brightening their schoolmates' day. They do this with the intention of receiving nothing back save for the cheer they invoke.

Glen Bona ('00) eases Tsz Man Leung ('02) into high school by staying after school to explain the many experiences he will have at East. The Big Brother/Big Sister program helps new students smoothly enter the East community, with advice and support.

The exhaustion of completing yet another day of school often leaves students tired and hungry, willing to do anything for a bite of food. The SGA and other East clubs, realizing the need for after-school snacks, do their part to satisfy hunger by selling foods with the help of club members, such as Corin Bolte ('01) and Emily Goldenthal ('01).
Right Around The Corner

They are the ones who volunteer their time and take extra time out of their busy schedules with the sole intention of helping others. Who are they? From Peer Helpers to nurse aides, East students who dedicate their time to running errands and ladling out soup to the homeless express different reasons why they do what they do. Rachel Wu ('02), a member of RAK (Random Acts of Kindness), regularly takes part in activities such as community clean-ups. RAK, like other "helper" clubs at East, emphasizes the importance of treating strangers with the same respect and empathy that they would treat their own friends. Wu said, "There is no such thing as an unselfish act of kindness - no matter what type of kind act you do, it always results in brightening someone's day." The act of helping others not only sets a good example for other students, but it also gives the participants a unique feeling, a gratification fueled on the fact that they are giving back to their community. Students help other students as well, for Big Brother/Big Sister, East's "buddy" program, enables upperclassmen to help out new students to East. A Big Brother might show his Little Brother around East and introduce him to some of the clubs. Lauren Xenakis ('01), a member of the club, said, "It's really a great program for new kids in our school and allows them to make friends more easily than they normally would. I'm glad I got involved."

In their Peer Helpers class which teaches how to react to difficult situations with friends, students choose sides for a debate over a selected Universal Values topic. The lesson of the activity, which illustrates every individual's right to an own opinion, encourages classmates to be sensitive when helping out their peers.

Freshman SGA representatives help prepare for their class dance. As representatives of their class, they have the dual responsibility of making sure their classmates' concerns are met and that their own input is taken into consideration in class activities. By lending an ear and speaking up, they keep the relationship between student and student government smooth.

Trying To Get The Message Across

Alan Deitch ('99) waits for his cue as the camera starts to roll. Eastcast represents a constant communication medium for the students. It acts as both an outlet for breaking stories and a supplement to ongoing issues. Topics can range from sports news to community issues to school activities.

Brittany Moshen ('02), in her "Foundations of Art" class finishes her art project on shading with various tones of color. Although the lesson provides a general outline of requirements students still have the freedom of creativity to design individual paintings. It grants an opportunity to express a message in the form of visual art.

Jodi Sarowitz ('99), Jillian Rice ('99), and Jen Thorpe ('99) examine an issue of Eastside hot off the press. Running a newspaper requires a special deal of editing and proofreading to insure accuracy and organization. Under the watchful eye of experienced editors, the newspaper remains error-free insuring easy readability for East students.

Kevin Snicket ('00) provides his point of view at a weekly Demogorgon meeting. Demogorgon represents a creative output for East students. They can express themselves through photography, poetry, prose, and artwork. With so much spectacular material, it is hard to select any one piece over another. But, there is only so much space and only the best of the best can make the cut.
ART CLUB: Abby Lichtman (President), Nicole Pressel (VP), Jennifer Buskirk (Secretary), Anne Kraft (Treasurer); Artistic advisors: Julia Lerman, Jill Shaffer, Jesse Daniels, Sarah Cho, Miriam Kim, Cynthia Koppel, Nelee Sim, Diana Tang, Allison Timko, Rachel Wu, Advisor: Mrs. Hinrichson.

CABLE 18/EASTCAST: Neal Cohen, Alyssa Cwanger, Keith Davis, Alan Deitch, Steve Glick, Aaron Inver, Marc Plewinsky, Beth Smulian, Matt Snyder, Shantala Surya, Meri Weiner, Crystal Wu. Advisor: Mr. Weaver.

Dan Reizes (99) and Jeremy Schafer (99) organize stacks of Eastside, preparing them for distribution throughout the school. As the school’s newspaper, monthly editions of Eastside keep students informed not only about school events but, community, world, and entertainment news as well. Timeliness is the key to good journalism. Our editors and staff work as efficiently as possible to bring the issues into the hands of East students.

As the bringer of the day’s morning announcements, Jerry Levine’s (99) voice provides a wealth of information for students in homeroom. With so many activities and events going on at the same time, students must be kept informed constantly to keep things running smoothly. At times, announcements can make a day, or ruin the week. No matter the case, East students count on the hard-working broadcasting team to keep them up to date.

With a smile, Beth Smulian (01) performs an interview for another taping of Eastcast to be aired on Cable 18. Reporters, writers, and technicians all work together to create the informative and entertaining program. Tuning in to Cable 18 allows East students to not only see their friends on television, but also get the latest news concerning the school.
Welcome To The Real World

Doing well in school is key to a great future, and teachers will readily attest that good grades are just the first step in advancing toward ambitious goals later in life. Clubs such as DECA, ROTC, and TAG all teach students the hands-on, practical skills that they need in order to succeed in whatever they choose to pursue later in life. For example, DECA, a business-oriented club, teaches students the basics of advertisement, management, and marketing. Ying Ying Dong (’01) said, “In high school you really don’t get exposure to real world activities and careers, but DECA really gives you a real sense of what it’s going to be like.” It is the successful balance of a solid education and real-life experiences that will ultimately put East’s educational philosophy into action. Thus, what students like Dong learn in English class will be put to practice during a DECA competition.

Another “hands-on” activity at East is the Cosmetology club, where students interested in the salon profession can put their skills to the test. Rather than just reading about how to style hair, Mr. Ipri’s students actually practice what he teaches, giving them the skills necessary in the very real life world of busy salons. AFJROTC, another activity that encourages the development of survival skills, gives students a unique opportunity to explore the possibilities of leadership and discipline, two skills crucial to future success.

With nimble fingers, Pietra Dunmore (’99) styles Candyce Muns (’00) hair. The Cosmetology club gives East students firsthand experience and an opportunity to employ the techniques they will use later in life should they decide to pursue cosmetology as an occupation.

In the ROTC homeroom, the morning flag salute is a show of the cadets’ patriotism. This value, along with others, lead to the lifelong skills learned through the class. Eli Brambilla (’99), a dedicated ROTC student, said, “ROTC teaches me maintaining respect and discipline. I can’t learn these things in any other class in this entire school.”

Using cool salesmanship Rob Ettinger (’00) hawks his wares for a potential customer. DECA provides a means for future entrepreneurs to get a taste of the business world. Some students opt to venture into retail, gaining insight on how to properly run a business, increasing their chances of successfully fulfilling their ambitions.
Practicing the styling techniques learned in class, cosmetology students apply their skills and apply them to practical use. Through classes that encourage natural talents, students can not only improve, but also prepare themselves for possible career opportunities.

Candace Jackson and Jamie Phillips enjoy a quiet moment in the hectic school day as they read through a pamphlet. Members of Teens after God are just like other students; they experience difficulties and disappointments every day. But, TAG members look to spiritual enlightenment to make up for any deficiencies.

Freshmen are ordinarily willing to try a variety of classes such as Lab Theater, Freshman Wind Ensemble, or Vocal Workshop despite having little or no experience in acting, playing an instrument or singing. None of these freshmen know whether or not they will make it to the top - to perform in a fall show, to play in Wind Ensemble, or to sing with the East Singers. "When I joined the music department, I didn't really know that I would sing with the East Singers. I just took Vocal Workshop because it was during lunch period, and I thought it might be fun," said Richard Chu ('99).

In vocal workshop, students who have never sung before learn the basics of singing, hoping to one day join one of the elite vocal groups. Students who take Freshman Wind Ensemble practice hard, with hopes of making East's elite band, Wind Ensemble, next year. Novice actors also gain the experience necessary for future shows through their introductory classes.

The older singers and actors look back and take account of how far they have come since their first music and acting classes. After all that work, they can start to call themselves musicians or actors.

Lab Theater productions, the minor league of theatre, showcase the talent of up and coming performers. Laurel Bedman ('01), in "The Forgotten Ones," is one such aspiring actress. These actors and actresses hope to rise one day to the mainstage show, where they will finally be in the majors.

Performing a successful piece during a concert requires an extra effort from the students, who must commit to practice both in and out of school. Despite such responsibility, Asher Ross ('02) enjoys participating in music groups. "Even though it's a lot of work, it's worth it," said Ross.
variety of students in the introductory Vocal Workshop find out every year. This class is a preparatory choir at East which lets students with limited experience in singing learn more about the skill while having fun. It is also a class in which the fundamentals are taught to prepare students who hope to pursue a musical career.

Lab Theater, an activity from where all thespians of East begin, teaches various techniques of the stage. As Colleen Martin (‘00) and Scott Goldberg (‘02) rehearse such techniques in “Danse,” they gain valuable experience and knowledge that will help the actors in future plays.

“After all that work, the students can finally start to call themselves musicians or actors.”

Although an introduction to music, the Freshman Wind Ensemble is also a way for students such as Elena Medina (‘02) to learn how to play music as a group. It teaches the importance of musical interaction to instrumentalists who ordinarily play alone. “I think it’s a great opportunity to meet other people that are interested in the same things you are,” added Medina.

Polly Erlich (‘02) and Willy Wang (‘02) bring music notes to life as they play their clarinets in the Freshman Wind Ensemble. This instrumental group consists of students interested in participating in the music program in hopes of moving onto Symphonic Band or Wind Ensemble.

Vocal Workshop, Freshman Wind Ensemble, Lab Theater
Endless rehearsals, extra hours, hundreds of repeated measures of music. Hoarse throats, voices singing on sluggish mornings, pitch-pipes playing over and over again. Members of East’s small ensembles singing at the sound of a chord. Those are the sacrifices made in D-wing everyday.

Devoting time outside regular choir practice, the Belles of East, Madrigals, Casual Harmony and Celebrations gather in the practice rooms every morning during homeroom to rehearse their pieces. Officers organize and lead their members, taking time to note dynamics, tone balance, and other critical areas in music. Members willingly listen to the directions of their leaders, following the music with bleary eyes, before the ring of the first period bell. This is not all they give, however. Every week, they practice after school, also, to quickly learn new repertoire for their numerous concerts.

Traveling to nursing homes, West Jersey Hospital, and elementary schools, the vocalists bring smiles to the faces of the sick, young, and everyone else in their diverse audiences. All of this done in the name of music. Truly, these students embody the soul of the vocal department. Selfless singing, devoted hours, and above all else, the spirit of celebration.

Performing pieces from the Renaissance, Max Polonsky (‘00), a member of Madrigals, sports the true attire of the Middle Ages. However, the attire is not the only factor that makes the group distinct. The songs they perform and the voices that sing them are the true mark of the Madrigals.

Singing “Carol of the Bells”, Beth Miller (‘99) and Man Yu Li (‘01) perform with a smile. As Belles, they combine bells and vocals to create an integrated song. Since ringing bells and singing can be rather difficult, the group requires continual practice on their pieces to accomplish this feat successfully. Said Miller, “We work really hard because there’s always room for improvement.”

CELEBRATIONS: Dan Berg, Balpreet Bhogal, Katie Bleaken (officer), Sarena Dorado, Jade Goh, Sharon Hwang, Theresa Hwang, Emily Jeo, Jean Kang, Christina Kim (officer), Juhee Kim, Abbi Sharofisky, Maureen Stolzer, Shantina Surya, Julie Warshauer, Mrs. Laurie Bindel (Advisor).

group, requires continual practice for its performances. However, the members realize that singing does not involve only work. Ben Traster ('99) and Jae Won ('99), members of the group, use their free time before a concert to sing at leisure, showing their personal enjoyment of the art.

Playing the highest bells of the song, Abbi Goharzai ('00) concentrates hitting her notes on the correct beat. Her high C and B bells not only add distinction, but also complete the melody of the piece.

Celebrations, which performs with bells without singing, focuses on playing individual notes in order to blend. Their method of using separate parts to make up a melodic whole requires weekly practices on not only sight-reading, but also communication. According to Christina Kim ('99), the group’s conductor, “Celebrations involves cooperation. Each person must contribute their own part in order to make it sound as if only one person were playing.”

“Endless rehearsals, extra hours, hundreds of repeated measures of music … all done in the name of music.”

BELLES OF EAST: Balpreet Bhogal, Katie Bleakley, Rachel Getel, Anna Cohen, Alyssa Ciwanger, Erika Etzin, Ariel Fos, Sarah Goldberg, Man Yu Li, Elizabeth Livingston (officer), Beth Miller (officer), Laura Pursell, Devra Seidel, Christine Yin, Mrs. Laurie Bindel (Advisor).

Performing arts is a complex world of actors and musicians who commit their time, effort, heart, and soul to their performances. Moreover, these artists must also involve all of their senses to produce the perfect blend of their talents. To illustrate, Laura Davis ('00) states that, “In music, all the senses come together - your eyes read the music as your ears hear the notes. Meanwhile, your fingers have to blindly search the instrument for the right keys. Together, the senses unite to create music.”

In addition to the basic senses, the artists must also use their voices in various aspects of the performing arts, such as Actor’s Studio or Concert Choir. They use both speaking and singing as a more direct form of communication to clearly present their art.

Overall, the performing artists use their eyes, ears, and voices in their performances in order to create a more unified and compelling piece.

Andrew Thompson ('02) looks out into the audience as if he can see the notes of the Concert Choir song materialize before him. As he listens to the blend of his fellow singers, he concludes that singing is a form of expression that includes a variety of senses. “Concert Choir is a great way for me to truly express myself,” said Thompson.

Chansons members concentrate on getting the right pitch as they listen to the tone that their teacher gives them. Their daily practice eventually pays off as the audience hears the melodious music. “Practicing everyday may become tiresome, but it’s nothing compared to the satisfaction I get at the end,” said Sona Kothari ('00).

CHANSONS: Laurel Budman, Jenny Chang (officer), Victoria Cohen, Thea Dorado, Neomie Elezer, Julie Feinsmith, Rebecca Gillespie, Emily Goldenthai (officer), Randi Grossman, Rebecca Halperin (officer), Stephanie Hornback, Sona Kothari, Elizabeth Klausner, Gabrielle Lance, Jennifer Pajdak, Gillian Rosenbaum (officer), Emily Sadel (officer), Betsy Schmid, Rachel Sherman, Amanda Winn, Christine Yoo, Ms. Cindy Quijano (Conductor).

As she listens to her fellow Chansons members, Julie Feinsmith ('01) realizes that her voice is not the only tool she uses while singing. Her hearing also plays a crucial factor since she must listen carefully in order to match her voice to the rest of the singers.
Judy Wu ('00) hits perfect pitches as her fingers run along her flute. All the instruction from Mr. Keleher pays off as she plays with precision. Said Wu, "Symphonic Band is an extremely enjoyable experience. Mr. Keleher, our conductor, is the glue that sticks everything together for the performance."

At Rachel Cetel ('00) performs in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" with Adam Rubin ('00), she gets to try her hand at Shakespeare. It introduces a form of theater which helps thespians like Cetel improve their acting skills. "It was a nice change of pace to do a Shakespeare show because most of us had never experienced it before. It was exciting to bring some of the old theater history to the Fast stage," said Cetel.

"The performing artists use their eyes, ears, and voices in their performances in order to create a more unified and compelling piece."

In the eyes of the Concert Choir, the songs that the members perform are not words put together with random notes. Rather, their music is art. Not only do the singers rehearse this music but they also create it, for they are not just members of a musical group - they are musicians.

CONCERT CHOIR: Balpreet Bhogal (officer), Amanda Birnbaum, Aviva Buchman (officer), Elaine Carroll, Shuo Ju Chou (officer), Alyssa Cwanger (officer), Scott Davis, Alan Deitch (officer), Alier Derado, Ariel Fox, Sandie Fraser, Sarah Goldberg (officer), Sharona Gonen, Jon Goodman, Arie Haif, Jennifer Hur (officer), Emily Joo, Jean Kang, Jennifer Kim, Danielle Lambersky, Jessica Laynor, Harmony Lee, Yong Lee, Stephen Lu, Bill Magee, Julia Mavrodin, Kerri Mullen, Morgan O’Neil, Sophia Rigatos, Amy Romm, Annie Sang-Urai, Rachel Singer, (officer), Maureen Stolzner, Shantala Surya, Andrew Thompson, Santosh Vardhana (officer), Anna Wesley, Mrs. Laurie Bindel (Conductor).

ACTORS’ STUDIO II: Laura Andrew, Leesa Andrew, Julie Berger, Ari Butler, Rachel Cetel, Anne Cohen, Alan Deitch, Elaine DiFlavio, Susan Grossman (stage manager), Kevin Inacker, Jerry Levine, Elizabeth Livingston, Colleen Martin, Kerri Mullen, Dan Reed, Sam Rosenberg, Adam Rubin, Jon Sagot, Beth Smulman, Karen Wislovec, Mr Robert Naton (Advisor).
Because of her dedication to theater and music, Erika Eltin ('99) participates in P.A.V.A.S., also known as the Performing Arts Visual Arts Society. The group consists of artistic students whom teachers nominate to represent various departments of the arts on P.A.V.A.S. Night. Though held for only a single night, the presentations reaffirm the importance of the arts. "Being in P.A.V.A.S., I feel honored to know that my hard work in the music and drama departments has been recognized and genuinely rewarded," said Eltin.

"These students form the backbone of the performing arts at East."

Bryan Benn ('99) discusses different ideas with Mr. Nation in order to produce a successful P.A.V.A.S. Night. Through the preparation for this night, students are given a chance to meet new people and to truly experience the arts. "The performing arts have given me an opportunity to explore a side of myself that I did not know existed four years ago. I am thankful for all that I have learned," said Benn.

THESPISAN SOCIETY: Bryan Benn (Secretary/Treasurer), Julie Berger (Vice President), Ari Butler (President), Rachel Cetel, Sara Chvala, Anne Cohen, Jeff Cohen (Vice President), Alan Deitch (Historian), Erika Eltin, Ariel Fox, Erica Geller (Instrumental Liaison), Sarah Goldenthal (Vocal Liaison), Jessica Laynor, Jerry Levine, Elizabeth Livingston, Colleen Martin, Marc Plevinsky (Technical Liaison), Dan Reed, Adam Rubin, Ben Schwartz, Meri Weisner, Wynn Williamson, Mr. Thomas Weaver (Advisor).
Through her involvement in Thespian Society and other drama-related activities, Ariel Fox ('00) improves her acting talents and ultimately receives a part in the spring musical, Annie. The Thespian Society strives to enrich actors' theatrical experiences while also encouraging students to try various aspects of drama.

The Stage Crew coordinates the lighting, background, and props in order to set the scene of all drama productions. Though little seen, crew members, like Keith Erickson ('00), play an integral part in each show by creating and organizing the entire setting of the stage.

At The Heart Of The Matter

Often, when students think of the performing arts, they bring to mind immediately those individuals whom the performing arts department spotlights—the tenor who sang the solo at the Winter Choral Concert, or the actress who played the lead role in the Spring Show.

Less noticeable are the choir section leaders who prepare night after night at dress rehearsals, quietly edging their sections to keep focused, noting missed entrances or messy dynamics.

Backstage is the stage crew, whose nightly job is to ensure that the activity behind the scenes runs as smoothly as possible, permitting the actors to go on with the show. Meanwhile, the musicians of the pit orchestra, without whose music the spring musical would seem empty and without heart, sit playing out of the line of view.

These students form the backbone of the performing arts at East. Their self-made purpose is straightforward—to bring the performing arts at East to the peak of perfection. This task they do quietly, without fanfare or need for praise, for their fellow members and themselves.

While practicing for Chamber Winds, Emily Saidel ('01) concentrates on playing beautiful notes from her bassoon. She wishes to get the audience to understand music, which is why she always does her best in concerts. "Reaching out to the audience with my music has always been one of my goals," said Saidel.

Many students do not have enough time to join more than one music ensemble. However, Adam Fensh ('00) manages to participate in several, such as Jazz Ensemble and Brass Ensemble. "I enjoy playing the tuba for different music ensembles because they give the audience a chance to face the music," said Fensh.

As Greg Halbrook ('01) plays the electric guitar for Lab Band, he realizes the importance that the ensemble has on the audience. Lab Band is just one of the music department's ensembles that stresses the value of having the audience encounter different types of music.

Face The Arts

One of the goals of East's drama department is to acquaint members of the community with the varied performances of its students. Each year, everything from the Spring Show to Mime Company's productions entertain the community. Facing the arts, so to speak, is something that has dual meanings. In one sense of the phrase, it is the process of introducing novice theater patrons to the diverse arts performed at East. It is helping community members to enjoy East's annual Opera Night, or introducing them to the student-directed one-Act's "Face the Arts," however, has another meaning as well. Because of the silence of their performances, mime troupe performers must use vivid facial expressions to communicate the plot lines of their skits.

To help her facial expressions, Beth Smoljan ('01) applies makeup for her next mime performance. Since she cannot speak, she takes every action possible to enhance the portrayal of her message. "In mime, facial expression is vital in getting across to the audience what you're doing. Since mime needs to exaggerate it, the makeup helps accentuate your reaction to what's happening in the skit," said Smoljan.

Jazz Ensemble: Ben Abo, David Anderson, Jordan Berg, Craig Bromberg, Richard Chu, Chris Clancey, Marc Davis, Adam Fersch, Alex Goldstein, Phil Hausler, Owen Hosey, Anthony Kasinskas, Kristina Kasinskas, Chris Kewley, Bill Klein, Evan Keesman, Rob Natelson, Jared Shavelson, Lindsay Tjattas, Jeremy Volkman, Dave Wolkach, Rick Wolkach, Mr. Timothy Keleher (Conductor).

Break A Leg!

For the performers involved in the fall and spring shows, Hell Week is a time of total immersion in their art, whether it is in orchestra, singing, or acting. It is a grueling week of late-night rehearsals that strive to fine-tune the production to perfection. This work that thespians put into the two shows is enormous, and their dedication shows through their impressive performances. As with any passion, the hard work ultimately pays off. The excitement of knowing that they have done their best in a show is unmistakable. “Even though the rehearsals are often long and strenuous, when you hear the audience cheering, you get this incredible feeling of accomplishment, and you know that all the work has definitely paid off,” said Erika Ettin (’99). Through the long hours and frenzied workload, the thespians love for drama still shine through, as brilliant as the spotlight is on opening night.

Wynn Williamson (’99), as Brady, takes the stand in East’s fall show, Inherit the Wind. Williamson, along with other thespians, puts all his effort into making the show a success through the repeated practices.

Jenni Joyce’s (’02) debut on the East stage as Annie proves her talents in both singing and acting. In the number, “N.Y.C.,” Joyce performs with veteran actress Dana Michael (’99) who also wants to pursue theatre as her career.

As she assumes her role in Inherit the Wind, Elizabeth Livingston (’99) plays the main role of Rachel. Though making her character believable requires much concentration and practice, Livingston enjoys pleasing the audience.
An expert character actress, Elaine DiFlavis ('99) gives a convincing performance as Miss Hannigan on the East stage. As the villain of the show, DiFlavis succeeds in entertaining the audience.

Actors of Annie come together to sing the satiric lyrics of "Hooverville." The dancers, coached by Mr. Nation, hold long rehearsals in order to better deliver the message of the song to the audience.

"The work that thespians put into the two shows is enormous, and their dedication shows through their impressive performances."

As she looks on with interest at the proceedings in the mock courtroom of the Fall Show, Julie Berger ('99) mentally rehearses her lines. Veteran actors like Berger understand the importance of dedication in order to get the lines memorized.

In his first lead on the Cherry Hill East mainstage, Max Polonsky ('00) gives an amazing performance as Daddy Warbucks. In a scene with the U.S. Cabinet, he talks with President Roosevelt, played by Ben Traster ('99).

Marching On Up

In rain or through pain, they still march on. Even amidst the chilly October temperature, they proudly sally forth with a smile and a spirit unequalled by others. They are the members of the Cherry Hill East Marching Band, and virtually nothing can stop them from doing what they do best. Marching Band members must play an instrument while marching uniformly to the beat of the music. Richard Chu ('99), the drum major of Marching Band, understands well the importance of stepping "on up," Chu said. "We depend a lot on the leadership and experience of the seniors. During these last few years we have improved because of their help and dedication." In order to perfect their technique before a game or event, the dedicated members practice for hours on end, during rain or shine.

While the band marches on, other performing artists are marching up, participating in the elite All State and All South Jersey musical groups. Despite the difficulty of getting into these groups, East students continue to surpass all standards, earning the school recognition for having one of the finest music programs in the state. It is not easy, but as any proud member of the ensembles will tell you, in the end it's all worth it.

The straight posture and crisp uniform portray to spectators the reputed precision of the East Marching Band. As a dedicated instrumentalist, Marc Davis ('02) finds that the discipline necessary in order to achieve such precision improves his music in other areas.

The half-time presentation at East's football games often remind spectators of their own school spirit. In order to coordinate this field show, a variety of groups, including the Marching Band, Colorguard, and Dance Squad, collaborate by holding daily practices together.

While dancing with Tiffany Carter ('99), Alan Deich ('99) shows little sign of having participated with Marching Band for only one year. His previous experience with music and theater eased his transition into the group, also helping him with various dance steps. Said Deich, "I must confess that it is some of the most fun I have ever had here at East. I met a lot of different people during those few months, and I am proud to say that they are all my friends."

As drum major of Marching Band, Richard Chu ('99) leads the group with the same musical talents that placed him in both All State and All South Jersey Bands. Despite all the work involved in conducting the band, Chu said, "Marching Band will be one of my most memorable activities at East because it gave me a chance to play a role in the actual shaping of the group."

The East Singers represent the highest caliber of the school's vocalists, such as Jane Cabalo ('00), who participate in the All South Jersey Chorus. The musical environment at East encourages students to high levels of accomplishment by nurturing their natural talents.

Watching the drum major for ahead of him, Jared Shavelson ('99), sounds the drums in order to keep the pace of the marching band synchronized. The strong beat of the percussion provides the rhythm for the entire band. "On the field, the marching band has to keep in step with me so that the beat improves our form," said Shavelson.

"It is not easy, but, as any proud member of the ensembles will tell you, in the end it's all worth it."
At the close of a song, Sarah Goldenthal ('99) steps forward to give her solo. In the dimmed auditorium, she brings together, in only a few measures of music, years of vocal experience.

Although Wind Ensemble is enjoyable to play in it also requires plenty of work. Gloria Fang ('99) admits, "Wind Ensemble is very prestigious. Mr. Yurko strives for perfection in breathing, tone, and dynamics." Because of these high standards from the teachers, the concerts surpass all expectations.

Normally, "banging out the noises" refers to an inexperienced player's learning new music through trial and error. However, to Josh Varon ('00), hitting chimes with a mallet is part of everyday practice. Those rehearsals eventually lead to the either of two band concerts that East hold every year. In full concert gath, Varon demonstrates his part in the excellent show that the students always give.

"The three groups' performances continue to amaze their audiences, bringing prestige and acclaim to East's music program."

Lisa Akiniska ('01) concentrates on refining the quality of her music. To play the cello, she needs both talent and strength in order to manage an instrument of such size. This dexterity helps her to play the concert piece with grace.

Music is epitomized through the sounds of Orchestra, East Singers, and Wind Ensemble. In these ensembles, East exhibits some of its best aesthetics. The students of each group dedicate themselves to their instrument, devoting hours of their time to the music that they love. They strive to improve their skills, practicing everyday both in school and out of school. Although all that extra work seems tedious, the students choose to practice since they desire express their passion for music.

When passing through D-wing, many are often surprised at the number of rehearsals and lessons taking place. Few actually realize that the melodiously graceful music really results from the hard work of both the students and the teachers.

As the vocal director, Mrs. Bindel instructs the East Singers, the high-caliber chorus at East. This renowned choir, having won a wide variety of awards, sets the standard for all vocalists. Wind Ensemble, the band counterpart of East Singers, likewise holds distinction in the music community under the direction of Mr. Yurko. He also conducts the Orchestra, which includes some of the finest string musicians in New Jersey. The three groups’ performances continue to amaze their audiences, bringing prestige and acclaim to East’s music program. Bravo!

Derek McMahon ('99) concentrates on playing the last notes of his piece, finishing the concert with a flourish. At East, the students truly desire to improve their skills as the year progresses. In order to do so, they take advantage of East’s acclaimed music programs, which offers opportunities to learn various aspects of music.

Learning into the melody, the East Singers' sopranos sway with the music. The girls peak at the top of their range, blending with the rest of the choir. The voices of each vocalist, however, still remain individual as they contribute to the songs of the concert.

WIND ENSEMBLE: Ben Abo, Lisa Akinskas, Yuan Al-Sayyad, David Anderson, Jaclyn Bell, Daniel Beng, Katherine Brealen, Craig Bromberg, Adam Bussey, Jane Cabalo, Howard Chang, Richard Chu, Gloria Farag, Adam Fensck, David Finstein, Erica Geller, Rebecca Gillespie, Nicholas Goede, Michael Green, Philip Hauser, Patrick Hsieh, Kristina Kasinskas, Megan Kelly, Daniel Kent, Jihoon Kim, Juhee Kim, Evan Kressman, Vivek Kumar, Jacob Millstein, Eric Moskowitz, Robert Natelson, Sarah Plimpton, Matthew Pollock, Zachary Rosenberg, Emily Saitel, Jared Shavelson, Jessica Stuart, Andrew Thompson, Lindsay Tijattas, Joshua Varon, David Wolbach, Richard Wolbach, David Yang, Kevin Yang, Mr. Bruce Yurko (Conductor).

Welcome To The Jungle

You know who they are. New generations of them come every Fall, some confused, some confident. Either way, it takes a special kind of courage to walk through East’s double doors the first day of Freshmen year. Arion Robbins (’02), like many of his classmates, was mortified about East. “Going to school with people four years older than me—people who can drive—scared me to death,” Robbins said. Another common fear is the increased workload. Freshmen must learn to adjust to the new teachers and curriculum. It’s going to be tough for some, but ultimately, the trembling freshmen of today will, slowly and steadily, metamorphose into the hardy sophomores of tomorrow. Priti Ojha (’02) has already settled into high school life. “Through time, I’ve really gotten to know the school better.” Ojha said.

Pictured at left, seeking advice in finalizing his schedule, Rick Branton (’02) turns to this guidance counselor, Mr. Delaney, to learn which classes will suit him the best. Although unsure of what to expect from the four years to come, Branton secures his high school career by starting off in the right direction with the proper help.
How Much Longer?

This year, a new law was adopted which increases the driving age by one year. Those who were born on or after January 1, 1984 must wait an extra year before driving without an adult in the car. This law applies to not only most freshmen but also, unfortunately, a handful of sophomores.

Most students are disgruntled by the increased driving age, even though many will not be able to drive to school anyway. “Although I probably wouldn’t be able to drive as a senior, it still bothers me that I’m not allowed to drive until I’m 18,” said Pat Bun Hwang (’02). Generally, students believe that the new law is irrational since it does not seem to be accomplishing anything in particular.

Despite the questions of whether or not the driving law will make a real difference, the freshmen’s main concern now is how to have a future senior social life without having to turn to Mom or Dad for a ride. “The new law makes things really hard because a group of friends won’t be able to go out without having to rely on a parent being in the car too,” said Allison Horowitz (’02).
Haines His Way

Students often wonder why a teacher would volunteer to be a class advisor, dedicating four years to a single group of students. There seems to be little compensation for all the extra time and effort. However, Mr. Haines, the new freshman class advisor, looks forward to the prospect of leading the class of 2002, especially since he enjoys working with students outside of the classroom. “I like working with kids, not just teaching them,” says Haines, who has always been involved in student extracurricular activities through positions such as newspaper supervisor, assistant wrestling coach, and freshman softball coach.

Describing his new job as being a “guide” rather than being an “advisor,” Mr. Haines intends to help freshmen by simply guiding them in their choices. “I just help them set goals and keep going on the right path without telling them everything,” he states, “It’s all a matter of direction.”
As freshmen, Jason Schmidt ('02), Jen Levy ('02), and Jeannine Chang ('02) fully experience high school for the first time as they participate in their Health class. However, they make a smooth transition to East through both the passage of time and the confrontation of anxieties. "High school's a big difference from middle school. It's a lot bigger and a little bit scary," said Schmidt.

Top Five List for Being Freshman
5. No more middle school
4. Adjusting to high school
3. Getting lost
2. Being called "Frosh"
1. Can’t hardly wait to be Sophomores
Second Time Around

It's their second time around. The sophomores of East are now one year closer to ruling the school. Some, after only one year, already devote themselves to various extracurricular activities. Jade Goh ('01) agrees, "Even though this is only my second year at East, I am really involved in activities such as GLOBE. Hopefully, in my senior year, I will be as involved in it then as I am now."

However, like the fellow students of her class, Goh complains of the significantly heavier workload that accompanies the courses of sophomore year. Unfortunately, these courses are known for their grueling demands. After the sophomores have had a year to settle into high school, they face tougher classes and more challenging assignments.

Yet, glad to be at East, the sophomores look forward to events such as Spirit Week and the Cotillion which show off their class spirit. Through these activities, the Class of '01 set a strong example for the opening of the new millennium. Besides, every step is closer to senior year!
I Got A 78?

Although it cannot provide driving lessons in an actual car, East’s drivers education classes teach students about driving through different means. For instance, students spend much class time watching informative videos or studying the state driving booklet.

As a visual aid, the videos emphasize the realities of driving. “Even though movies can’t replace real cars, they do get the point across. Some videos really do shed some light on drunk driving and regular driving,” said Sarah Daly (‘01).

Besides movies, the school also provides a driver’s manual which contains all the necessary information of the rules of driving. Students read and study its two hundred pages in class with their teachers in order to better understand what it means to drive.

Although a few students dislike the extensive note taking, the vast majority of students make use of the class to actually learn since they realize that the driver’s education will help their own driving. “I really paid attention in class and studied the manual because I wanted to pass the written test. The driver’s permit was my goal and this class helped me get closer to it,” said Jon Mancro (‘01).

Their faces light up and their attention span expands as a driver’s video plays on the overhead TV. Unlike many academic classes where the students become bored by the subject matter, Drivers Ed offers a refreshing break from the boredom of academic classes. The best part of the class is that in addition to having fun, students actually learn something. Defensive driving, a crucial part of the East Driver’s Ed curriculum, prepares the students for virtually any dangerous driving situation.
Wisdom Through Suffering

It's every high school student's nightmare. Two hours of Biology to study for, coupled with an hour and a half of math homework that needs to be graphed by hand along with a rehearsal for the fall show needs to be done, and it is already dinnertime! Unfortunately, this is all too real for many sophomores entering their first year of "the real East experience." Compared to the relatively light workload they received freshman year, sophomores do not know what to expect when they walk into their classes the first day of school. Sure the rumors had already spread far and wide about the horrors of honors classes, but the true terrors of sophomore year can only be experienced first hand. For the unwary, that first night of homework is a night they will never forget. Andrew Kim ('00), a former sophomore said, "Freshman year did not even come close in preparing me for the amount of work that I was to receive during sophomore year."

Concentrating intently on the difficult test that Mr. Rocchino has prepared for her students, Iris Goldstein ('01) gets a taste of what it really means to be an honors student. As sophomores like Goldstein experience for the first time the various difficulties and triumphs of harder classes, they in turn learn much about the rigors of high school.

Poring over her English test, Diana Levitt ('01) reaches back into her memory in an attempt to remember the details of her book. Like most East students, Levitt considers her classes very important since working hard is a significant part of her own satisfaction.

Shaun San Pedro ('01) peers into the microscope, watching an amoeba drift past the lens. Despite the infamous difficulty of sophomore year, the high caliber of the classes prepares students for future education and careers. Said San Pedro, "Even though it was easier freshman year, you get used to everything."

Top Five List for Being Sophomores

5. Time to take things more seriously
4. Tougher work
3. Driver's Education/Permits
2. You're not "frosh"
1. Can't wait to be upperclassmen
Leaders Of The Pack

With two years of high school already under their belts, juniors this year are finally enjoying the status of being an upperclassman. More than an elevated ego goes into the bargain, however, as the next successors of the “top dog” seniors, many of them take on completely new roles. For some, it means mentoring some of the underclassmen. Tom Caruso (’00) said, “I’m trying to be an excellent role model and guide the frosh so that they don’t wind up as goofy as I was my freshman year.”

For example, in extracurricular activities such as F.O.P. and Blood Drive, some juniors suddenly rise to the leadership positions of chairperson. Add SAT’s onto the schedule, and the year seems harder than ever before. Cara Stein (’00) said, “There’s more pressure than ever on you this year to do your best because everything you do will be looked at by someone.”
License To Kill

Every student anticipates receiving their driver’s license since driving gives a whole new freedom to the teenage years. Also, the coveted license indicates that the student is finally free after seventeen long years of dependence on parents. “It revolutionized my high school experience. I never knew how fun life could be up until now,” said Tom Caruso (‘00).

Student driving also takes a load off parents who must constantly chauffeur their teenagers around. Instead of listening to constant complaints of not having a ride anywhere, parents can now toss the keys to their newly licensed drivers. “It’s a convenient privilege because high school students today have more things to do,” said Jeff Wang (‘00).

However, driving is not all fun and games. It’s actually an examination that tests whether or not students are mature enough to handle real responsibility. Said Aviva Buchman (‘00), “More often than not, students our age are not very safe drivers because of the adrenaline rush they get when they’re having too much fun.” Glen Bona (‘00) agrees, “Driving is a big responsibility, especially when accidents happen.” Having the license may be exciting, but students must accept the obligations involved in order to enjoy the privilege.

MULTIPLE GUESS

It’s the rite of passage that each teenager must go through in order to be eligible for college. Not exactly something to look forward to, the SAT’s and its cousins still provide an opportunity for students to aim higher and score better. AP tests, for example, provide AP-students a chance to earn college credit. By scoring a perfect score, they may be exempt from that course in college. Much study and preparation are required for a student to earn a high score, but as Dave Gadren, ('00) said, “I hate standardized tests, but in the end all the stress is worth it.”

Rather than dread the slew of standardized tests, the student should think of them as opportunities to rise. Not only can they teach the student more about a subject, they also give colleges the opportunity to see a student’s abilities in that specific subject. In the end, the experience is beneficial for all.

Calculator ready and pencil scribbling away, Chun Ho ('00) prepares for the AP tests as he takes notes in Chemistry 2AP with Mr. Siler. Like many juniors who take AP-level classes, Ho’s hard work is aimed at helping him score a four or a five on the AP exams.
Despite being upperclassmen, Howard Chang ('00) and Blake Rudov ('00) must remain diligent in their classes such as Chemistry. As students in their critical junior year, they realize that their current academic status holds high importance to colleges. Said Chang, “We know we need to apply to colleges soon and have the pressure of doing well in school.”

Anna Stankosky ('00) and Blake Rudov ('00) discuss their school day while taking a lunch break. Through their three years at East, juniors form lasting friendships through their daily meetings. These relationships, which strengthen with each passing day, often last long past the years at East.

Being class officers has been such a great opportunity for all of us. We are all very proud to represent the class this year. We have enjoyed every day and worked very hard to perfect every activity. Spirit Week and the Prom were the two best events of the year.

Q & A with ...

Mr. Lacovara

YEARBOOK: Having come in as vice principal of this graduating class to see us as seniors, what was your immediate opinion of the class?

MR. LACOVARA: The first impression that they gave me was of a group of very nice, lady-like gentlemen. It appears that the class of '99 is a very good group, and I am very pleased with the group as a whole.

YEARBOOK: What has impressed you most about this class in relation to all the other classes you have seen come through East?

MR. LACOVARA: I have been most impressed by this class' energy and honesty, and I am more than willing to help students that are honest and sincere.

YEARBOOK: How do you think that this graduating class will be remembered by the faculty and the underclassmen?

MR. LACOVARA: I believe that this class will be remembered for their great enthusiasm and energy, which is obvious in the large number of students that are going on the senior trip to Disney World. Their unity and school spirit will not be forgotten.

YEARBOOK: How do you think that the past year of being vice principal of this class has influenced you, not only as an administrator, but also as an individual?

MR. LACOVARA: I think that coming back here to become vice principal has made me feel much younger. I feel that I am really helping the students and pointing them in the right direction.

YEARBOOK: What aspects of being the vice principal of this class did you enjoy?

MR. LACOVARA: I really enjoyed all of the activities that I witnessed and was a part of. The concerts, plays, performances, and athletics have all been exceptional. I find a lot of joy in attending these things and also hearing of the students' acceptances to colleges.

YEARBOOK: What would you like to say to the departing seniors?

MR. LACOVARA: I hope that I have influenced and helped all of you on the road to success. It has been a pleasure meeting you.

Mr. Gallagher

YEARBOOK: What have been the effects of having your daughter in this graduating class?

MR. GALLAGHER: Having Kristy in the class of 1999 enabled me to become acquainted with the students on a more personal level. I feel that I have developed a special relationship with the students, and this has allowed me to get involved with this class both as a principal and father. For instance, not many principals have had the opportunity to travel with some of their students or to go over students' houses for special occasions.

YEARBOOK: As you've watched the class of 1999 grow older physically and mentally, in what ways do you believe that this class has matured the most?

MR. GALLAGHER: The level of independence that I have witnessed in this class has increased remarkably. They have demonstrated great academic strength in various manners, such as the number of National Merit Semi-finalists, and the outstanding SAT scores. Also, their athletic teams and extra curricular activities have been memorable, and they have clearly assumed the role of the leaders.

YEARBOOK: How do you believe that this class has changed and shaped you?

MR. GALLAGHER: This class of 1999 has taught me mainly about humility. It isn't everyday that a principal can get into a snowball fight with students from his school. Specifically, it has helped me grow as an administrator and father. I believe that it has also helped me relate to the issues that confront adolescents better.

YEARBOOK: How do you think that this class will be remembered?

MR. GALLAGHER: This class will be remembered best for their attitude of believing that "this school is ours." They have taken Cherry Hill East by storm and have definitely left a lasting impression upon East. Their confidence and leadership will not be forgotten.

YEARBOOK: Any last words?

MR. GALLAGHER: I have a lot of personal attachment to this class in particular, and will miss it. Thank you to the graduating class of 1999, it has been four fun years.

The first thing that I think of when somebody mentions the class of '99 is love. Last year, Mrs. Paul and I put together a collage of the entire class of '99 that is entitled "Mrs. Pecker's Kids." I've put it up in my office at Beck, so I see all of your lovely faces every morning. I hope all of your dreams come true, and I hope to see you all soon.
To The Class of ’99:
As the officers of our class, we would like to thank you for allowing us to represent you during our senior year. We have had such a blast in everything we have done, and together we have conquered all there is to accomplish at East. As a class, we have surprised everyone with our enthusiasm during each “Spirit Week”, with our two victories in Powder Puff, and with all of our support at school activities. Also, all of our dances have been great as well as our class trip to Disney World. Now our time at East is done, and we are graduating. No matter where we go next year, our four years at East will always remain the foundation upon which we will build our lives. Whatever our memories are, we will remember them with pride and remember those who helped us to make them. We wish everyone the best of luck.
Love, Your Class Officers and Advisors,
Emily, Kate, Jeanne, Mitch, Mrs. Gail Peterson, and Ms. Lois Kornberger

Test your ranking scholar
I.Q. Match each scholar to his/her response.

1. What color pen do you usually use?
   a) I prefer a pencil.
   b) Blue…like the Papermate Medium Points the best.
   c) Blue.
   d) In case you can’t tell by the canyons that have slowly evolved around my eyes, I have risen above the crude tools of writing to the mind-numbing powers of the slightly computer.
   e) Blue Papermate Fine Point—the cheap kind that you can get a dozen for $6.88.

2. Your biggest pet peeve is...
   a) Inefficiency.
   b) People who avoid their responsibilities.
   c) Whenever I get annoyed with people, I try to remind myself how much I annoy people. But if I had to say one thing, it bothers me that I take so little to make someone else feel good about themselves and yet so many people are unwilling to take time out of their day to do so.
   d) Narrow-minded people.
   e) People who don’t know how to drive and think they do, driving near me for a long time. Or people cutting in line and thinking they are somehow cool.

3. Your must-see TV show is...
   a) The Simpsons.
   c) Ally McBeal and Friends.
   d) ER, baby! I can’t believe that George Clooney is leaving the show. I want to be Doug Ross in scrubs.
   e) Since I am a fickle person, it changes from month to month.

4. A book you can always fall asleep after is...
   a) The Scarlet Letter…also by Hddie
   b) Chemistry and Chemical Reactivity — sorry, Mr. Sileo.
   c) Without fail, the book that I am attempting to read and is due tomorrow. For the life of me, I will never be able to figure out what possesses me to read a book on my bed when I will invariably fall asleep. I always will. But yet I ALWAYS read on my bed. It is one of those things.
   d) Current’s American History book.
   e) Most textbooks.

5. What is hanging up on your walls?
   a) The Oath of Hippocrates, my electrocardiogram, my Eastside application, and a sign that says, “For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?”
   b) A picture of my pet at Nemo, a framed cat drawing, a flat stuffed monkey, some fans I painted, some fans that were given to me as a thank you gift, a poster, a poster, some Star Trek poster, and some kiddy puppy posters my little brother gave me when he was really, really little.
   c) Two Smurfs posters, two blacklight posters from Flashdance, and glow-in-the-dark flowers.
   d) Absurd and milk ads, Cruising Amy poster, Moon’s sunflowers, map of the world, and pictures of Joe Flennery.
   e) A Souvenir of London, a picture of two horses, a painting, two wooden art things (one of a flower), looking bear and the other of a dog and roller skates, a “Decisions” poster, the Seattle skyline, a Lion King poster, a picture frame with postcards in it, and a picture of my parents and me when I was about 1 year old.

6. What is the one item that you cannot sleep without?
   a) A blanket.
   b) A 2 foot bear from FAO Schwartzs.
   c) Unfinished homework.
   d) Clothes. Does that count? I mean, that is more than one item. If that doesn’t count, then I’d say a pillow.
   e) Two items: flannel sheets and Robie.

7. What is your most missed childhood activity?
   a) Having fun in school.
   b) Reading.
   c) Playing soccer.
   d) Making decisions without having to worry about long-term repercussions.
   e) Drawing.

8. What do you keep on yourself at all times?
   a) Chapstick.
   b) Watch, wallet, and keys. Oh, and of course, pop tarts in a compact.
   c) My sense of humor and an appropriate quote from some novel.
   d) Watch.
   e) Antibacterial cleanser and Tic-Tac cough drops.

9. Where would you rather be right now?
   a) Anywhere as long as certain people are there.

b) Great Britain, Spain, or the Philippines.

7. You have just been told that you have exactly 24 hours to live, what would you do?
   a) Sleep. It looks like fun. No human jumprope though.
   b) Go through my regular schedule. What would be worse than making a big deal out of your last day and dwelling for 24 hours on the fact that you were going to die?
   c) I would get in touch with everyone that I am really close to and just talk with them.
   d) Have a 24 hour long conversation with people I like.
   e) I’d spend the time with family and friends, just talking and laughing.

coutGRRR: sup?
grad99: my parents are buggin'.
coutGRRR: why? what's up?
grad99: you know, they're just getting all corny about me graduating.
coutGRRR: whoa, misty eyed much? But I hear you, mine are the same.
grad99: dude, they keep saying, "I can't believe that our 'baby' is going off to college."
coutGRRR: MAN, I know, mine repeat over and over how they can't believe how fast I've grown up.
grad99: yo, it really does seem like time has flown by. Feels like yesterday when we were at freshman orientation, listening to Belchikoff's "buffet speech."
coutGRRR: OH YEAH, remember how we managed to get lost everyday for the first week.
grad99: that's because the upperclassmen were telling us to go to the pool on the fourth floor.
coutGRRR: we were stupid enough to listen to them in the beginning.
grad99: I guess we were pretty stupid.
coutGRRR: Hey, but remember how awesome Spirit Week was that year.
grad99: we totally took them by surprise.
coutGRRR: Oohhhhhhh, remember pep rallies??
grad99: yeah, they did away with them, but I really had fun doing all that stuff freshman year.
coutGRRR: can you believe it no more high school assemblies ever to miss class for...
grad99: whoa, wait a minute, remember Big AL??
coutGRRR: "Hugs not Drugs."
grad99: did you think freshman year was hard? You know Beck to East ... I thought it was kind of challenging.
coutGRRR: I dunno, but it was seriously like nothing compared to the sophomore slump. grad99: Definitely.
coutGRRR: Hey, at least we got our permits that year!!
grad99: oh yeah, cuz driving around in that dorky car with STUDENT DRIVER sign plastered everywhere was so cool.
conGRRR: LOL. Man, we were always getting shafted as underclassmen.
grad99: hey, they finally started making some real food (Pizza Hut), I mean you gotta give them that.
conGRRR: true
grad99: ... oh, and didn't you dig those trash bags on the walls at our underclassmen dances.
conGRRR: hmm, and those unlit soph and frosh hallways???
grad99: Thank God we survived those years.
conGRRR: Yeah, hooray for SAT's junior year.
grad99: oh yea, hooray, we weren't allowed to wear hats or coats in school.
conGRRR: what about those laser pointers?
grad99: HAHAHA! =) conGRRR: those were just a couple downsides of that year, but "Wonderful Tonight."
grad99: yeah, Junior prom.
conGRRR: and what about the tons of junk college mail we got from all those never-heard-of-colleges???
grad99: that was so annoying.
conGRRR: I am so relieved that the whole excruciating college process is over.
grad99: I don't ever want to have to go through any more applications, college essays, financial aid forms, rejections, admissions ... conGRRR: YEA, no more summer reading books!!! But doesn't it make you want to do it all over starting from kindergarten. =( grad99: I don't know about that ...
conGRRR: darn, last high school prom.
grad99: no more water ics at Diane's ...
conGRRR: but wasn't Project Graduation awesome?
grad99: HELL'S YEA! And what about the days we were supposed to be sleeping in when HSPT's were going on.

2:53 PM
conGRRR: that sucked. What ever happened to the supposed teacher strike that was going to delay the first day of school for a week?!
grad99: oh, and the cuts days that we weren’t allowed to cut!!
conGRRR: what’s up w/ that?
grad99: yo, at least they resurrected Jell-O wrestling for us.
conGRRR: yea class of ’99.
grad99: so what sticks out in your mind from the past 4 years?
conGRRR: DISNEY WORLD, need I say more?
grad99: haha. I am almost scared of leaving not just school, but life, as I know it.
conGRRR: I know, I find myself looking around at the people in my classes and the hallways and wondering. “Will I ever see you again?”
grad99: That sounds so weird that someday this could all be a distant memory.
conGRRR: wow.
grad99: sorry, but I have to go to work now, but I’ll see you at graduation, if not then, sometime, right?
conGRRR: ok, hope to see you around.
grad99: bye.

“The laugh is the best way to express a feel. To expose feelings is to risk exposing your true self. To place sheets and doors before a crowd in risk their loss. To love is risk not being loved. To live is risk dying. To try is risk failure. But risks must be taken, because the greatest hazard in life is to risk nothing. The person who risks nothing, does nothing, has nothing, is nothing. They may avoid suffering and sorrow, but they cannot learn, feel, change, grow, love, live. Only a person who risks is free.” Anonymous.

"One truth is clear: Whatever is, is right." Alexander Pope from Essay on Man. There are many memories that I choose to remember and I am not remembering them. However, at this particular moment, I chose not to remember any and only reflect on my experience as a whole. This experience was a lot different than what I expected and it has made me realize that we are all natural entities of the planet, and the only difference between us and the monkeys is that we got bored and find ways to occupy ourselves so that we don’t go insane producing the mysteries of the universe. Thanks to the Harwoods.

Senioritis: POSTPONED

Giving an exhausted sigh, the senior ponders the C-wing staircase that he is about to trudge up for what seems like the three millionth time. Intending to drag himself up the stairs by the railing he grips it with his left hand, still clutching several pounds of books in his right arm.

Without too much thought to his weariness, he thinks of the day ahead, in which he still has to take a test, find some gym clothes to wear, and run down to guidance. His mind fastforwards as he plods up the stairs to his next class. He reminds himself to finish some homework, study for SAT II’s, and try to polish his college essay when he gets home.

Mentally trying to work some sleep into his busy senior schedule, he suddenly remembers that he has forgotten his graphics calculator in his locker. He goes around the staircase and backtracks. He sees some freshmen bouncing up the staircase towards him. Slightly irritated, he tries to remind himself that they too will go through the grueling first semester of senior year. Smiling, he thinks of his early impression of senior year … a time for relaxing after three years of hard work. Not yet. Senioritis will just have to wait just a little while longer ...

AFTE After

And We Led Them

This year's freshman will notice them first. The seemingly invincible look in their eyes combined with their patented confident strut make them easily distinguishable from the other students in the hallway. These are the senior leaders of Cherry Hill East. Students unaccustomed to meeting these all-powerful rulers of extracurricular activities need not fear. As tall as some of them may be, they are just ordinary students in extraordinary positions.

As Mr. Belchikoff said during freshman orientation, "Cherry Hill East is a smorgasbord of after-school activities." Similarly, seniors who are actively involved hold diverse positions as well. Santosh Vardhana (99), an editor-in-chief of Eastside, said, "When you're a senior, you have this desire to give back to the school and teach to others what you've learned for the past three years." Tom LaMaina (99), an officer of Amnesty International, said, "Even though there is a lot of work involved, I am still very dedicated to Amnesty because all the hard work is worth it." Beth Miller (99), a co-officer of Belles, agrees. "Between the four officers of Belles, we divide up the big workload, but I love it all the same."

Dispersed through the school, signs reading “Go Senior Powder Puff” and “Repeat 1998” encouraged the team to win their second game in a row, a situation rarely seen at East. Finally, this year’s senior Powder Puff team won that second game, becoming one of the few classes to defeat their opponents both years.

Led by their quarterback, Nikki Jay (’99), the team won the game with ease, the resultant score being fifteen to zero. According to coach Andy Grubb (’99), “We did our best to teach the game and its concepts, but on Sunday, it was up to the girls. They came out to play and the class of 1999 won its second Powder Puff game.” This victory not only was due to the girls’ desire to win but also resulted from the dedication to the game and each other.

Though the first few minutes were hushed with suspense, the attention gradually became excitement, especially after each goal. Said Christine Parker (’99), “After the first goal during the second play we were psyched. But because we were ahead during the whole game, we became really pumped and excited.” Parents, teachers, classmates, and other spectators cheered as the seniors scored their touchdowns. Each point scored ultimately allowed the girls to triumphantly step off the field at the end of the game with their heads held high.

Although Powder Puff is not like the other football teams, the game is just as intense and every great play means just as much to its players. As a result, there were no regrets and all the teammates agreed that, given the chance, they would gladly play Powder Puff again.

"It doesn't matter who we say we are. You define us in the simplest, most available terms possible: a brain, a princess, a jock, a basket case, a criminal." Just because the girl in your homeroom dresses in black, listens to Nirvana, and rides a motorcycle to school doesn't mean that she is a "freak." Similarly, a "nerd" may be the first word out of your mouth when you see him arrive at school with a fifty-pound book bag and thick glasses slipping off his nose, but look deeper, and his real personality will surface.

Debkumar Sarkar ('99) said, "We all put on one hundred thousand facades, and our personality is the intermingling of those facades." Ben Abo ('99) added, "I'm a buffet. I'm a brain, music man, artist, scientist, and a perfect friend. Every person is different, and you can't categorize people because they are all in their own category." He believes that his own diverse interests prove that every person has a unique personality. Amy Katz ('99) said that she fits into the "brain in the basket case" personality the closest. "I think of myself as someone with all these fun and wacky interests," Katz said.

GOVERNOR'S SCHOOL
After serving a ball to their competitors, Ben Kim ('98) and Justin Brown ('98) prepare themselves for the retaliation. To successfully return each hit, they not only have to concentrate on the ball but also have to rely on each other. The communication necessary in doubles tennis requires both compatibility and skill, traits found in all team sports.

Hitting a clean serve, Jason Geller ('98) smiles with satisfaction. Since the serve is such an integral factor of the game, tennis players must frequently practice it in order to improve enough to eventually defeat all their opponents.

A good batter's eye requires skill and instinct. It's the benchmark of a worthy baseball player. In the split second that the ball takes to reach the plate, the batter must make crucial decisions. Any hesitation results in a strike and a missed opportunity. However, a good eye and calm nerves lead to a hit, a play, or even a home run.

Swinging into the throw, the pitcher concentrates on every ball considering the pitch is a crucial factor of the game. Although the outcome of each play may somewhat depend on him, he manages to dismiss any stressful thoughts in order to focus on his pitch. In this way, he not only improves his own abilities but also helps
No one can ever call a cougar a pussy cat, as long as East’s volleyball team takes to the court. As the state champions, they have proven their skills. With unmatched style, the members of the team have shown that through hard work and natural talent, East can set up and spike a ball better than anyone.

Although they may be the best at their game, they can’t complain of loneliness at the top of the school’s athletic skill. East’s tennis team joins them as conference champs, having worked diligently for the title. “We really dedicated ourselves, and practiced hard for each other,” said Niel Adhikari (‘99), a team member. The team’s intense effort paid off when they walked away with the conference title.

These teams illustrate East’s potential as winners. And they’re not the only ones. Together with the rest of the spring sports community, they spotlight East’s commitment and drive to win. With a lot of talent, hard work, and a little luck, they can meet their opponents with confidence in their ability and courage in their hearts. Whether they are playing with volleyball and net, a tennis ball and racket, or a bat and glove, the spring sports teams play with a style that inspires us to remember that is a champion.

The softball player’s quick eyes scan the field. Years of experience have taught Lauren Richter (‘99) to keep her eyes on the ball, one of the most important factors of the game. “My basic mindset during a game is to concentrate but also to have fun while helping my team out at the same time,” said Richter.

Always on her feet, Sue Allen (‘99) throws with all her might then awaits the oncoming hit. She and her teammates play hard as they try to win every game. But in order to do so, the team practices day after day to master different tactics as they hone their skills. “We are always ready with our defenses. Everyone works hard so the team has improved greatly,” said Allen.

Preparing for another hit, the softball player carefully watches the pitcher’s every movement. By examining each action, she can better understand the pitch she is about to receive. In turn, she is able to hit the ball and successfully complete yet another run.

Standing firmly, the baseball player prepares himself for the pitch. This balanced stance allows for the best power when he reaches forward toward the ball. By involving his whole body with the strike the player can most effectively hit the ball into a run.

Talking strategy, teammates measure up the opposition on the other side of the field. By seizing this chance to regroup, the team can quickly discuss different approaches to win the game. This huddle also revitalizes the team spirit which ultimately encourages the athletes to play to win. “Baseball is a mentally challenging sport. Before each game, you need a chance to about the task in hand,” said Joe Kolodziej (‘99).
Forcing her way through a wall of opponents, Meredith Sobie ('00) protects the ball as she races toward the goal. As a lacrosse player, she relies on her aggressive offense to counteract her competitors' attacks. "When I'm really into the game, I'll do almost anything to win," said Sobie.

Practicing for an upcoming game, John Lyie ('98) passes the volleyball back and forth with his teammates. The team strives to improve by constantly working on their skills, whether on or off the court. Although this dedication seems brutally exhausting, the hard work ultimately leads to their title as state champions.

Jumping into the air, Tim Roche ('00) warms up by spiking the ball. The practice before a game helps him play effectively later on while also building up his energy. "We stress warming up because it's an important part of a game. It really prepares us for the game," said Roche.

Lunging forward at the last moment, Christi Madden ('99) reaches up to steal the ball away from her opponent. The extra work the players put into the game not only heightens the standards for all the members of lacrosse but also makes them into a stronger team. Said Madden, "I put in a lot of hard work to get the outcome I want!"
Leaping smoothly over the hurdles, Lauren Flaskey ('00) dashes toward the end of the race. Since the hurdles are literally obstacles in her path, the runner requires extra concentration and effort. "Although running takes a lot of hard work and determination, hurdles needs a little more skill," said Flaskey.

During Betty Jedlicka's ('00) split-second in flight, exhilaration courses through her veins. After the jump, she eagerly awaits the outcome, hoping to beat her last record. "I had to train hard all season and preseason to reach a new goal each year," said Jedlicka.

Listening to their coaches, Kristy Gallagher ('99) and Meredith Sobie ('99) learn the tactics necessary to win the upcoming game. In addition to teaching during the discussion, the coaches also encourage the team to try their best while enjoying themselves. The prettiess must be successful since, according to Sobie, "Everyone works hard, focuses, and gets their job done while having fun at the same time."

Nancy Dwyer ('99) and her opponent spar for the ball during a crucial moment in the lacrosse game. Lacrosse, like all other sports, not only requires a high level of competitiveness but also calls for a degree of aggression. Said Dwyer, "If you're playing but your spirit is not into the game, you can still lose. It's important to not just be skillful at the game but also to want to win really badly."

Breathing deeply and carefully, Michelle Mahalak ('00) prepares herself for a race. By concentrating on her goals at every meet, she discovers new incentives to put a little extra effort into her running. Said Mahalak, "Before each meet, I just try to do my best. Even a small improvement is a step toward my goal."

Taking a deep breath, Kristie Hidde ('89), puts all her might into this one last try to beat her previous record. She realizes that throwing a javelin requires pure effort which results only from concentration and will. Said Sarah Plimpton ('99), "Javelin is a skill that requires both strength and agility."

Running confidently around the track, Allison Venuto ('00) staves ahead with iron determination, a main factor in any sport. Such will allows her to endure exhaustion of running long distances. According to Venuto, "Determination and dedication are the keys to success."

With great effort, Josh Latourette ('00) serves the ball to his waiting opponent. Practicing almost every day after school, the tennis players improve their abilities by playing each other on the courts. After all the days of training, the athletes have the skills that only come with experience to defeat all their challengers. Said Latourette, "Since we worked hard, there wasn't a match we had doubt about. We put hard work and effort into everything we do together."
The baseball player subjects himself to pain as he throws himself toward the base in a last-second attempt to be "safe." To the real athlete, pain does not become an obstacle in the context of the sport since he is willing to sacrifice anything for victory.

Jumping into the air to spike the ball, Sam Desai ('98) gains full control of the ball. He uses every muscle in his body to hit the ball powerfully enough to make it impossible to return. This ability is acquired only after continual drilling which the team goes through in order to win.

During practice, the coaches demand that the lacrosse team members jog the ever-tiresome activity. Yet, the time together gives the girls a chance to talk and build team unity. Besides, the exercise ultimately prepares them for their next game. "The practices are really hard, but your game time is worth all the hard work in practice," said Megan Kelly ('00).

Cheering with his teammates, Chad Walsh ('99) helps hype up his team with shouts of encouragement before they start the game. The team spirit keeps everyone focused yet eager to play ball. No matter how the team is doing, they can always rely on each other for support. "Our team spirit is great. Everyone is rooting for everyone else. If we're not on the field, we're still up and supporting each other. We're like family," said Walsh.
When Push Comes To Shove

During a crucial moment when victory is on the line, both football players and coaches gather to discuss various tactics on how to outmaneuver the other team across the field. Living up to their reputation of always fighting back, the East football team keeps its spirit alive as Mr. Grubb, their coach, preps the athletes on offense in the game. Goalie Carolyn Snyder ('00) goes to any length in order to save the ball, willing to take countless falls for the goal she defends. Whether diving for a soccer ball or passing it to a teammate, she exerts all energy necessary to attain the results she wants.

East's football team goes to work as they tackle the opposition. As the coaches can attest, the most important element of winning is the desire to do so. The ambition drives the team to win through any strategic means possible, such as tackling.

A confrontation between two soccer players over a ball can become a true battle of skill. The fight drives Scott Lermack ('99) to reach for every extreme, prompting him to try anything. At such a moment, a quick mind and body will help him gain the upper hand.

Pushing and shoving may have been rude in Kindergarten, but on the playing field, they are the norm. In the aggressive sport of field hockey, only the player with both courage and strategy can emerge victorious. With this tactical combination, Jane Caballo ('00) fights to wrest the ball away from Lenape opponent in a fight to the finish.

GIRL'S SOCCER: Perri Brenner, Caryn Bronstein, Nancy Dwyer, Sarah Garonzik, Julie Girman, Marisa Kravitz, Christi Madden, Lindsay McGinn, Jessica Naumann, Jennifer Padlo, Kelly Perkins, Laura Pursell, Emily Scott, Stephanie Singer, Carolyn Snyder, Meredith Soble, Rachel Sterling, Richa Verma, Mr. Troutman (coach).
Teamwork is the mindset that outlines Richa Verma’s (’99) game. Although the girls learn independent playing, the game itself requires working together. Each teammate not only depends on individual skill, but also on fellow players for support.

Weary from a long game, Josh Gross (’99) takes a short break to restore energy. When revitalized, he once again takes to the field to do his part in winning the game, despite all the grueling physical exertions.

Though many skills are necessary in field hockey, most of the game depends on the team’s determination to reach the goal of winning. Attempting to steal the ball, Jenny Szczurek (’99) surges ahead with a fierce offense, demonstrating her own resolve to succeed.

Using his quick reflexes, Brett Berman (’99) blocks the soccer ball from his competitor as he directs it toward his fellow players. Although soccer is a physical sport, it still demands a sharp mentality. He must keep thinking ahead in order to make a goal past a wall of opposition. Constant practice, however, teaches the team to think and act so quickly.

The East football team prepares to penetrate the Washington Township defensive line. Since the basic goal of football is to overpower the opposition, the team strives to intensify their offense in their games through continual practice.

TAKING THE PLUNGE

In a seemingly individual sport, team work is necessary to a winning tennis season. Realizing the importance of working together, Jenny Chang ('00) and her fellow teammates unify into a team through their unanimous goal to reach athletic superiority. "We've been so successful as a team because each member possesses such a strong desire to improve," said Chang.

Cheering in the cold, the school cheerleading squad encourages the football team for another game. Despite the bitter weather, the girls animate the crowd through their energetic rallying. "We work really hard to keep the school spirit alive at East. Even though most of the crowds aren't that big, we take advantage of who we have and keep everyone hyped up even in freezing weather," said Allison Nason ('00).

With a backhand swing, Jen Hur ('00) lunges forward to return the ball to her opponent. Although she plays alone on the courts, she practices together with her fellow players to become an efficient tennis team. According to Hur, "Tennis may be an individual sport, but it's still a team sport."

Dig, set, serve, spike - the four basic techniques of volleyball that are standards in every game. To master them, Athena Niemczak ('99) practices every day with endless exercise and scrimmages. The constant work teaches the entire team to take the techniques to different levels for their own advantage in a game.

In an attempt to save the ball, Tricia Kang ('99) dives toward it in order to ensure that it will not hit the floor. Although volleyball players dislike the pain associated with diving, most embrace it for the sake of the match. Since they consider pain secondary to the game, the athletes risk cuts and bruises for their win.

Pacing herself for the next mile, Sarah Levi ('99) measures her breathing to go the extra distance. Cross-country demands not only physical but also mental endurance which requires runners to put their concentration to the test during every race. It takes more than just muscle to cross the finish line. Said Levi, "Any effort you put forth in the sport really does pay off in the end."

Though weary from the grueling run, the East cross-country team perseveres, determined to finish ahead of their competition. As a test of physical fitness, speed, and endurance, cross-country can be one of the most demanding of sports since the runner must struggle to last through an entire race.
BOY'S CROSS COUNTRY: Benjamin Bendrich, Brian Fineburg, Kaushik Ganguly, Dave Gelfand, Bartosz Grobelny, Andrew Keller, Robert Koslow, Adam Lambert, Alan Leff, Derek McMahon, Michael Nagelberg, Matthew Snyder, Aaron Yaffe, Mr. Witig (coach).

GIRL'S TENNIS: Jennifer Brown, Holly Brownstein, Jenny Chang, Erika Ettin, Nadine Ginsburg, Alanna Herman, Jennifer Hsu, Alexis Langella, Lindsay Levin, Lauren Marlowe, Lauren Richter, Mr. Ipri (coach).

Winner Takes All

At first glance, the constant work that Christi Madden ('99) puts into soccer seems to be without reward. However, according to Madden, playing in the game is its own reward, especially if the game ends in a win. "After practicing for endless hours, I know I have succeeded when I can leave the field with the feeling of being a champion," said Madden.

Striving to keep the ball in his possession, Brett Canosa ('99) hopes to score a goal not only for himself but also for the team. He knows that each goal makes a great difference in winning a game. "My desire to win is only decided on the success of the team's desire to win. I try my hardest to win for the excitement of being a champion," said Canosa.

Leaving the race Allison Venuto ('00) prepares herself for an upcoming meet. Practice is a necessity for successful athletes like Venuto since it increases the chances of winning through the improvement of skill. Said Venuto, "I love winning because the better I do, the more incentive I have to do better at my next meet."

Eyeing the ball, Lara Baron ('99) positions herself to ensure that she will hit it with precision yet power. She realizes that this coordination is essential to their acclaimed volleyball team since it is the basis of every successful play.

Competition turns tough in a game like football considering it demands aggression from its players. Despite the sport’s difficulties, the athletes continue to play hard in hopes of a rewarding outcome - a win. Like in any sport, the exhilaration of winning is enough to compensate for the countless hours spent in practice.

Intent on gaining the ball, Renee Desrochers ('00) races forward to whisk it away from her competitors. Since each member of field hockey plays an essential part of the game, together, they form a stronger, more successful team. Said Desrochers, “We are based on our team unity, allowing us to win when we play.”

Sprinting to beat her opponent to the ball, Stephanie Singer ('99) attempts to help her team gain the upper hand. In order to do so, she undergoes rigorous conditioning in practice, acquiring the ability to dominate her games.

At East, learning occurs both in and out of the classroom. In addition to receiving a formal education, East’s athletes learn valuable lessons which can only be realized from being part of a team. For instance, the rigor of many sports require students to rely on teammates in order to win a game. As Jeff Su (’99) said, “For a team to succeed, each member has to be focused and know exactly what he or she wants to achieve.”

Because sports do require a lot of dedication and time, athletes must learn to balance both studying for school and practicing for games. By learning to make sacrifices on behalf of the team, students learn that true responsibility requires the willingness to put others before oneself. Said Christine Ku (’01), “Our commitment to the team teaches us the value of responsibility.”

Also, students learn cooperation through participating in a team sport. During their practices with one another, athletes realize that working together, as a team, is the only way to improve their game. “My teammates helped me work hard and have fun at the same time. Now I have lasting friendships and a keener sense of togetherness. It’s a joint effort,” said Gloria Fane (’99).

Since the scoreboard displays every individual’s plays for all to observe every round, Jon Fusfield (’01) feels the heavy pressure to meet the bowling team’s expectations. However, he shrugs off the worry through concentrating on hitting another strike.
Not only does Jen Padlo (’00) bowl to compete, she also plays to have fun. Despite the emphasis on striving to win, Padlo manages to ignore all stress in order to enjoy participating in the game.

Shuo-Ju Chou (’99) pays extra attention to form as the East bowling team attempts to win yet another game. Though the sport is a popular pastime, bowling with the school does not draw as much support as expected. “There’s extra pressure on bowling because if we don’t do well, then it’s going to be cut,” concludes Chou.

With no Paul VI defenders hovering around her, Joy Pela (’00) has a clear court to make her shot. The open basket, however, makes the shot difficult because of the stress of meeting the crowd’s expectations of throwing the ball through the hoop.

Tyaisha DuBose (’99) dribbles the ball past her opposition in a game against the team from Paul VI. Though the physical aspect of basketball is exhausting, the mental pressures of playing for others are just as demanding. According to DuBose, “Being a senior, there’s a responsibility to show leadership to underclassmen.”

All For One And One

The members of the swim team, such as Jackie Cona (’00), rely on each other for support at each competition. Though every teammate may swim alone, they accomplish the wins of their meets together. According to Cona, “Teamwork is important because you have to encourage each other in order to swim your best.”

To the untrained eye, wrestlers like Guy Guri (’99) seem like individual athletes. However, their entire match comprises of several single matches, and in order to win, the entire team must work together. “Wrestling is mostly an individual sport, but the only way you can get better is working with teammates,” said Guri.
As they practice for an upcoming track meet, both Alan Leff '01 and Andrew Liu '01 agree that winter track is a team sport. Cooperation is key to success of each meet since every runner contributes to a win. "We all work as a group and we always take care of each other to help each other improve," said Liu.

Representing East as the school mascot, the Cougar, Eric Gramatges '99 rallies to stir school spirit at sports events. By doing so, he encourages not only his own enthusiasm for the school but also that of all his fellow students.

Constant practice with the team helps wrestlers like Chaz Quiskill '00 develop the skills necessary to win in a match. Through working together, the teammates not only build unity but also improve their wrestling. Said Quiskill, "Wrestling is really hard. It's a team sport because it takes a team to make each individual win."

The Final Count

As a symbol of triumph, Charles O'Brien ('99), assistant coach for the bowling team, gives Lisa Reichenbacher ('01) a high five. All the practice, skill, and effort of these two bowlers come together in the last seconds of the match in the form of the coveted strike — the score for which each bowler strives to gain.

Arms in motion, Madsen Matsumoto ('01), Allis- son Venuto ('00), Sue Caruso ('01), and Sarah Levi ('99) run the last practice lap before the start of the track meet. The runners must be prepared to face any physical or mental obstacle that may arise. By exercising before the meet, runners are able to warm up and set their minds on the competition.

Sports
As drawn to the long, extended arm above it, the basketball floats in midair. Lauren Marlose’s (‘06) face, contorted in an expression of pure effort, betrays the determination to make these final seconds of the game count. Marlose’s energy rises to a high point in these final moments, when she knows that anything can happen.

When players need a boost, cheerleaders are there to urge them on. Often, in the second half of a game, when leaders will envisage the crowd and the players with their shouts and calls of enthusiasm. Crystal Wu (‘99) said, “Cheerleading is something that boosts the players’ morale. We often do cheers with the players’ names in them in order to encourage them.”

In the heated moments of the wrestling match, Aaron Wiggins (‘00) pins his opponent to the mat, bringing his body into a position of dominance, waiting for the referee to call the count. Wrestling, a sport in which even a millisecond matters, depends upon the high skill and agility of wrestlers.

Without any defenders, Andrew Schwartz (‘01) lines up for the shot. Although players spend much of their time mastering individual skills, they consider the support of the team a more important factor. Many times the unity of the court leads to an excellent performance during the game itself.
Kicking Back

Face it—we all need a break some time or other during our hectic lives as high school students. Some listen to music to relax, others brew special herbal teas and bask in the aromatherapy. Still others, however, combine the aesthetic experience of sculpture and the soul-relaxing effect of art into one. For East students, 3-D Art is the place to be for a fusion of these two qualities. Not only do students learn the complex art of sculpture, but they also learn to relieve some of their stress for forty-two minutes as they concentrate solely on their art. This concept extends to other electives at East as well. Because the grades from electives are not included in a student’s academic GPA, there is no pressure to get a specific grade—only to enjoy the class, and learn something interesting.

There is a myriad of different areas covered in the electives, so students with interests as diverse as business, drama and carpentry can all spend a portion of their day “vacationing” from the rigors of school.

Using papier-mâché and cardboard, Candyce Muns ('00), Fran Villar ('01), and Kristen Decina ('02) form the details of their model of Georgia O'Keeffe, their favorite painter. The combination of creativity and hard work that 3D-Art draws from its students is a key factor in the final project. Said Decina, “3D-Art gives us a way to express ourselves through the art projects because we work with a lot of different materials—one day it’s pastels, another it’s wood, etcetera.”
The constant rumble of machinery emphasizes the flurry of activity in the Woodshop room. Students like Chris Cooper ('01) choose this elective for a good hands-on experience with design and wood construction.

Commercial Art, taught by Mr. Jackson, introduces students to various forms of demonstrative art. Giving the opportunity for a variety of ideas, the class encourages students to express themselves any way they would like, while keeping the newly learned art techniques in mind.

A single press of a camera button captures countless ideas into one photograph. But, to learn every detail of using a camera, Alyssa Swanger ('00) and Rachel Goldiner ('00) take photography, which is very popular among East students. Here, they practice focusing and using the lens.
Calatan окружающий мир весь день.

Мы зелёная, волшебная планета, где живут разные виды животных и растений. Каждый день мы открываем что-то новое и удивительное.

Кроме того, у нас с вами есть возможность исследовать и изучать окружающий мир с помощью научных методов и инструментов. Так, например, с помощью микроскопа мы можем исследовать микроскопические организмы и их взаимодействие с окружающей средой.

Кроме того, использование калькуляторов позволяет выполнять математические вычисления более эффективно и быстро, что позволяет нам расширить наши знания о мире и его процессах.
Work Hard, Play Hard

They were designed to save time and energy, reducing countless hours of meaningless work. These efficient machines are the graphing calculators, primarily TI-83's, which make all math homework assignments infinitely easier.

In addition to their convenience in class, the calculators also offer a welcome diversion from the monotony of a long period. Their readily available games provide just enough entertainment to keep students awake in class.

While looking over her homework, Nnedinma Onejeme ('01) checks her answers with one of the popular TI-83's. These calculators make all math-related courses easier through their wide variety of functions and relative efficiency. Said Onejeme, "All you have to do is whip it out and put in numbers to get an answer."

Students have the opportunity, through class participation, to discuss various themes and issues. This interaction encourages minds to be open to each individual’s point of view. Such free discussions not only add interest to class but also fosters learning.

Although learning a new language is difficult, having friends in Mrs. Wurz’s ESL class makes the lessons easier. Just knowing that fellow classmates are willing to help encourages students to learn more from the class. Also, socializing with one another gives, in fact, a means for the students to practice the lessons they have studied for ESL.

While reviewing classwork, Zack Studin ('99) and Matt Blackstone ('99) develop a better relationship with their teacher. Though most students shy away from the prospect of getting to know a teacher, this type of relationship results in benefiting both: students can get extra help while teachers can better understand their students.
Social Studies

There are teenagers who try to separate their social life from school as much as possible and there are those who don't even bother to do any work at all since they are too busy partying. However, the students who actually want to balance their lives both in and out of school know that they must incorporate their cramming into their socializing.

It's not unusual for these students to frequently meet together to study while also having fun. The concept is quite simple: friends, pizza, and textbooks are all that are necessary for a last-minute session of reviewing notes and hanging out. Although some find it difficult to keep up the juggling act of both work and fun, most students agree that studying with others is more effective than studying alone.

Working on a group project during class, Jared Shavelson ('99), Larry Schmidt ('99), and Chris Sauve ('99) concentrate on making progress with the assignment. However, like all students, they spend some of their allotted time socializing in order to make the work more interesting. The talking also creates better productivity in their project since it allows them to enjoy what they are doing.

Students often review notes together after school, cramming for upcoming tests. By having friends around to talk with, the study environment becomes more relaxed, causing a greater retention of information and even improved grades.

Not all social activities involve the mall or the movies. When students have a major test the next day, studying with friends is inevitable. Justin Kaplan ('00) and Lindsay McGinn ('99) share their study tips together, not only alleviating stress but also enjoying the study session.
IT AIN'T OVER YET!

When the 2:25 bell rings everyday, some students go home, but many remain although the school day is officially over. Most participate in extracurricular activities, but a fair number everyday stay after-school for more academic reasons. A prominent example of this would be the taking of the make-up. This process usually involves a lecture hall or classroom, a handful of other nervous test-takers, a few number two pencils.

Some try to talk to classmates who have already taken the test in a desperate attempt to find out some information. Most of the time, other students will never reveal anything. However, even if they do, the student often faces a much more difficult test, the penalty teachers give for missing tests.

While taking the make-up, the test becomes even harder as daydreams of watching TV or eating an after-school snack float through the mind. Furthermore, concentration on the test ironically decreases since the eerie quiet of make-up rooms are so unlike a regular test-taking environment. Despite these drawbacks, students still enjoy one advantage that more or less makes up for them - having those extra days to cram in as much information as possible.

Robyn Brown (99) quickly finishes up her math homework after school. For many East students, the workload demands a lot of their time, and sometimes working after school is the only way to fit everything in. Some Brown, like many other students, wants to do well in school, the occasional extra help session is a must in her busy schedule.

By coming in after-school, David Bibbs (01) has enough time to not only finish his woodshop project but to even refine it. He also experiences one-on-one help, which is hard to find during a short class period, from his teacher, Mr. Foster, who can now give him some extra advice on his finishing touches.

When students find that a certain assignment is too difficult, they stay after school for extra help. Erika Ezzi ('00) works out a particularly vexing math problem with her teacher, Mrs. Goldberg. It is important for both teacher and student to interact since all those hours spent at extra help not only benefit the student, but also let the teacher know where each student is in terms of progress.

Seeking help in science, Josh Sellers (02) finds the extra attention needed to help his grade. The after school time also gives his teacher, Mr. Young, a chance to introduce new aspects of science that are not ordinarily presented during class hours.

174 After School Work
Taking his time in the quiet of the hallway, Alex Kutsche ('00) enjoys the fact that the regular buzz of the students isn’t around him after school. Although most students hurry to their lockers to make the buses in time, some savor the relaxed feeling of the hallway to recall their assignments.

By working together, Jerry Levine ('99) and Alan Deitch ('99) display the importance of teamwork in any hands-on experience. Teamwork helps students not only accomplish goals easier but also enriches the learning process through the camaraderie that develops. "You must work together, as a team, in order to succeed," agreed Levine.

At the beginning of the day, students like Rachel Cerf ('00) give the day's announcements to make students aware of important news and activities. Not only does this ritual benefit all the East students and faculty, but it also benefits the students who do the announcements by giving them personal experience. It prepares me for my possible future in communications," said Cerf.

Wanting to better understand computers, Sherry Lui ('99) receives the help of her teacher, Mrs. Stepp, who teaches her about different aspects of the machine. However, most of Lui's new knowledge of technology comes from working with the computer itself. "Hands-on computers teaches necessary skills for life today and in the future," said Stepp.
In order to help students learn the art of photography, classes teach them how to develop their own film, encouraging personal experience. By doing the work themselves, students like Alexis Johnson ('00) and Kelly Hunt ('00) can better understand the details of developing film. "Photography has not only given me the opportunity to take better pictures, but also helped me fully experience a process I had been totally unaware of before," said Johnson.

Whereas other classes may enforce strict adherence to a set of rules, the Foundation of Art class allows students to experiment with their own methods. As a member of the class, Jirada Prakmanond ('09), learns the patience and carelessness of an artist along with the essential art technique as she paints what she has drawn. "When I draw in class, I actually learn more about the art," said Prakmanond.

To sharpen his drawing skills, Brandon Frederick ('07) sketches from a picture for his drafting class. Since he must draw on a daily basis, he not only improves his talents but also directs his concentration on art. Said Frederick, "Drawing in class teaches that you have to keep trying when you want to get something right."
Counselors give their all

Despite his busy schedule, Mr. Mancini takes some time to chat with his students, like Lisa Gibson ('00). Though guidance counselors must deal with an overwhelming amount of paperwork, they are always willing to assist those who seek advice, focusing on the needs of the students.

Lauren Thurm ('99) waits for her guidance counselor, on whom she often relies for advice on difficult school decisions. Many East students like Thurm make appointments with their counselors to discuss virtually anything on their mind, whether it's school-related or not.

Course-selection month is a time when students can explore new opportunities each year. East's myriad of different classes and electives can leave a student confused about which courses to pick. However, guidance counselors like Mrs. Linton help students like Jeff Richartz ('01) to find just the right balance in their schedules.

Mr. Schilling helps Brad Lafferty ('99) solve a scheduling conflict, taking into account course requirements and his interests. Just as if working a puzzle, counselors piece together the optimal schedule for their students, despite the difficulties involved in organizing class selections.

Each year, during the rush of college applications season, many seniors scramble to get everything done. They cannot do it all alone, however. It is the job of guidance counselors like Mrs. Denker to advise students on everything from how to write college essays to the actual selection process.
Cutting Corners

Every student has been victimized at least once. Whether it be an English paper, a chemistry lab, or even a research paper, nothing is off limits for the procrastination monster. As countless students can attest, it is that all-too-dangerous boogie monster that preys on so many unsuspecting scholars. Night or day, no one is immune to the monster’s evil powers. But, while there is no way to ward off the monster’s powers, students have discovered that help is but a car ride away – at the neighborhood bookstore. There resides that shelf of Cliff Notes, filled with the golden jewels of last-minute information that can defeat any evil. Students more pressed for time can also turn to the age-old tricks of copying homework from friends. These and a multitude of other methods are all forms of cramming that have helped students survive the four years of high school.

Sharing answers to get their assignment done, Jenny Pajdak ('01), Alex Hersen ('00), and Joy Pela ('00) sit together to compare their ideas before the bell rings to signal the end of class. This time restraint encourages students to work together to finish their task with more efficiency, thus absorbing different ideas and views. “Working together in class is fun and easy compared to working by yourself. Besides, I’m able to meet new students and see what they think about topics that we are studying in class,” said Pela.
Abby Lichtman ('01) gets help from Jason McCollin ('99) as she soaks the information into her head. To many underclassmen, the upperclassmen are people to go to for help with schoolwork because they have more experience in past classes. "I am so glad that my older friends can help me with my schoolwork when I need it because they can be such a big help when they want to," said Lieberman.

Reviewing for a vocabulary test, Vince Devine ('99), Marc Hall ('99), and Nicole Hampton ('99) cram together to get their work done faster. Although students study most efficiently in the environment of their homes, some students forget or do not study at all.

"Usually, I have time to study but sometimes I don't or I totally forget. Then I have to find time in school to study so that I won't fail the test or quiz completely," said Hall.

His mind clouded with thoughts of history, Kevin Skobac ('00) quickly highlights the excerpts most important to him. By selecting the more significant passages of the text, he cuts down on the time he must spend later on studying for the test.
Rules And Regulations

Students, like Alisha Greenberg ('01) often take a well-needed break from the trials of school by enjoying favorite songs on wallmen or portable CD players. Despite school law, which clearly states that personal electronics are not permitted on school grounds, students need to escape the pressures of academics with the help of music.

One of the many unspoken rules of high school, as Nam Kim ('00) realizes, requires that students take notes while a teacher lectures. However, most classmates find the implicit law practical since it helps them in their schoolwork. Despite common misconceptions, such rules do not intend to frustrate but rather encourage students in their studies.

Krista Wessner ('99) takes advantage of the freedom to chew gum in class. Unlike many other schools, East allows students to have gum, disagreeing with the notion that it is a distraction. Considering the popularity of such a simple activity, students appreciate that they may chew gum without fear of trouble.

Reflecting the high expectation of East, Mr. Jackson instructs Irene Kalavrouzinis ('00) and Adam Bodzin ('99) on a difficult commercial art assignment while also reminding them of their responsibilities as participants of the class. Such teachers, as authority figures to students, enforce school policies through a variety of means to maintain order within the building.

Waiting to be called on, Dana Michael ('99) signals to her teacher that she has an answer. Requiring students to raise their hands ensures a more productive and orderly classroom by giving every classmate a chance to participate.

Jessica Werner ('00), Jessica Lazaro ('00), Sherri Levin ('00), and Dan Kent ('00) silently work on a few questions. Teachers sometimes assign "busy work" to keep their students quiet. As Levin points out, "Some people may complain about the rules, and sometimes I do too, but in the end, if we all do it, then school is not such a bad place."

Here's to you,
Melissa, Rachel, and Bill,
Through all the years,
We love you still.

You've made it through,
To high school's end,
As siblings, of course,
but also as friends.

As you see new horizons,
and explore new terrain,
We wish for you only
Good health, fortune, and fame.

Our love and best wishes go to you three,
As you bring triple the pleasure to our family.

All our love,
Mom, Dad & Erica

An angry sort, who never smiled

The "Babemaster" he was called
He stood right up, he never crawled

They called him Arnold like his dad
This made his mommy very glad

At nine he made the hoomers ring
While at his church he loved to sing

So quickly then the years they flew
For this the "baby" of Zad's crew

He filled his parents with much pride
And held his feelings deep inside

In the blink of an eye he's grown to be

Your past has been a happy one
Throughout the last four years,
It's filled with pleasant memories
And thoughts you hold so dear.

And now a path emerges,
One that's totally new.
We know you'll make the most of it,
And it will make you happy, too.

BJBI is where we first met
And started a friendship we will never forget
Although we attended different schools,
Hanging out on weekends was always cool
Between birthday parties and the JCC
We quickly became known as “G&G”
From Beck to East our friendship did last
And now we are having quite a blast
Between double dates, the proms and such
We love hanging out oh so much
Concerts, bowling, and Grey Poupon too
We always found something to do
Our friendship has lasted through laughter and tears
We'll always remember these wonderful years
Although high school has now come to an end
We know that we will always remain the best of friends.
Brett and Adam:

Your friendship began at five years of age,
Wearing Jams, Converse sneakers, all colors- the rage.
Hairstyles that changed from bowl cuts, buzz, spikes to a tail.
Can it be that college responses are being sent in the mail?
From Johnson to Beck to East- even Hebrew School, Camp Harlam, Island Lake, JCC Basketball and Woodcrest Pool.
Confirmation in Israel, floating on the Dead Sea,
Competing for grades, who got more A's or more B's.
Adam preferred one sport, Brett preferred others,
This friendship's as close as if you were brothers.
Doctor or Esquire, will be your careers of the future,
Can you picture Brett in the courtroom or Adam tying a suture!
If there's one lesson left before you depart-
Hold on to this friendship and follow your heart.

With all our love and best wishes as you pursue your dreams,
Maris and Stan Bodzin

Dear Debby,
Throughout the years at East, with your head held high, you supported me, all the way. Thank you for being proud of me and for loving me when no one would have blamed you had you rejected me.
As we approach the divide, I hold in my heart the wonderful memories of life we have shared together. I step out of the picture knowing that you are fully prepared to solo. Always remember, whenever you need me, I'll be there.
Love, Mom

Dear Mom,
I could not have asked for a better life and I owe it all to you. You've shown me how life is meant to be lived - to have no regrets. You've shown me the real world and taught me values, culture, and traditions to last a lifetime.
It's not everyday you find a mother and her daughter graduating in the same year. You are the true definition of a supermom. I am very proud of your hard work and determination in your job, grad school, and as a wife and mother. You're my mother, my friend, and my role model. There's no other way to say it except - I LOVE YOU!!!
Love, Debby

AMANDA AND SARA

AMANDA - BEAR

SARA - BEAR

It all began with a Butterflake box on a hot July day in 1991. Amanda and Sara put aside their shyness and decided that a bond from a bakery in Teaneck was a good sign. After numerous toll calls between Cherry Hill and Philadelphia, Amanda got the right idea and moved to Cherry Hill, only 2 miles away from Sara. Things couldn’t have been better! There were hours upon hours spent on JCC camp buses, in the pool, in theater, visiting Niagara Falls and Lake George after many card games, not to mention all the amusement parks and candy, sugar, hairspray, and toothpaste on the mirror galore. Amanda met cousin Melissa when she was still a baby and Sara remembers a time before Molly and Anna, when Amanda and Sara climbed out onto the deck through a window in Philadelphia. They even discovered that Sara’s cousin once dated Amanda’s mom! They took trips together to South Street and obsessed over Doc Martens, as well as went pumpkin picking at Johnson’s Farm and ate honey sticks, while wearing matching rings. They spent every weekend together in 8th grade, even if it was to do homework. Amanda saved Sara’s sanity. They experienced way too many drastic haircuts and perms, NEVER AGAIN! After a memorable bus ride to Lenape Park, they soon started high school. They somehow saw each other less, but remained just as close. This passed quickly and they started having coffee and a muffin together every morning. Nothing could beat studying Biology, at all hours of the day and night! Thank goodness they passed the final after that night! Unfortunately, they still are the BEST procrastinators!! The summer of 1998 was great!! They went to the Lilith Fair and the movies, not to mention Applebee’s with Amanda’s kiddie cup of soda. Amanda surprised Sara with cupcakes from Butterflake and an “anniversary” card. Of course, Sara still squeals and Amanda still yells at her. Halloween was tons of fun, eating matzo ball soup and cake (and candy!!) Through all the years, they have had tons of memories which they will never forget. They are so glad that they ignored their first impressions of each other and built a friendship that can never be beat.

We will be friends forever and always!

ERICA LAUREN GELLER

From your first day of school to today, you have made us very proud. You couldn’t have done a better job in turning parent’s “dreams” for their children into reality. Now it’s your turn to “follow your dreams” and become everything you want to be. Your charm, wit, intelligence, talent and overall ambition will enable you to succeed in anything you choose.

KEEP ON SINGING!!!

We Love You Very Much.

During good times
During bad
Through the laughter and tears
We've made it through the years

You've always been by my side
You're my trusted guide
You're like a sister to me
I hope you never leave

Born thirty days apart
We've played important parts
Always been there for each other
Watching out for one another

This is why it's lasted so long
Never did each other wrong
We've made it through a decade
We hope this friendship will never fade

To our Lauren:

Lauren, as your parents we are so proud that you have reached this milestone in your life. You have worked so hard to achieve your goals, and we know that you will succeed in your future endeavors. You have grown from that little girl in the picture to a beautiful young woman who is loved by your family and friends.

Your family is thrilled by your accomplishments in school, your dedication to dance, and your zest for life. Your goal to become a teacher is one that we are proud of, and can't wait to see you in front of your own classroom.

You are a great sister to Ashley and an excellent role model for her. Always remember that family is first, and will always be there for you.

Love Always,

To Our Little Girl:
Thank you for bringing such joy and laughter
Cherished memories and growing pains into our lives.
You are our dream come true.

To Our Beautiful, Young Woman:
It is your turn to dream now.
With your values, intelligence and tenacity—
Reach for those dreams because we KNOW
You can accomplish anything you put your mind to.

High School Graduation is just your first step into adulthood.
Our love and support will be with you in all of your future steps—
Wherever they will lead.

All our love, Mom and Dad

Kate:
I can’t believe that I am sitting here and writing something for your senior yearbook. It seems that not long ago we were taking that familiar walk to Sharp School with Pop Pop cradling both of our hands. I used to see you in the halls of elementary school and ask you to get me out of trouble. But now I see you in the halls and ask you for a ride somewhere after school. Even though you’re a girl and I’m a guy, we were always best of friends. Always able to talk to each other and say what was on our minds. Even though we fought, we soon came to a conclusion and settled our differences.

It was always you and me. Sticking with each other no matter what mischief we got into. We would always cover for each other and have each other’s backs. Even though you will be going to college next year, I know that we will stay good friends and build more fond memories upon this foundation that we have already established throughout our childhood.

Love, Brendan

Adam and Missy-Friends Forever

JCC bus, softball at Sherri, 8th grade dance, nites at Arnold's, Freshman dance --out of control, Missy's basement, Adam's out by 10:30, walks to Sara's, 3rd floor at Greg's, Missy's retainers, Geometry-help every nite, studying chem test, calling Hindy, water, Airheads, Dave Matthews Band, "I dare you guys..." "We know what's Up," Mad fights, Calls from camp, rides to school, morning but, killing each other, sleepovers, and so many more that we forgot to remember.

"The road to a friend's house is never long."

Addy,
I can't even begin to tell you how much you mean to me and how fortunate I've been to grow up with you. You're not only my best friend, you're like my brother. Next year, I'm going to miss our morning rides to school and our many weekends of hanging out. But I know, that no matter where we end up, we'll always be close. After all, we're neighbors.
Love,
Missy

Miss.
The JCC bus started an everlasting friendship. I know that as we grow older our relationship will only become stronger. You are a gift in my life - you're my best friend. Thank you for the past 12 years and for the many years to come.
Love,
Adam
CARYN

Through the years we've watched you grow
You've brought us more joy than you'll ever know
It's hard to believe how quickly time flies
Our little girl has grown up right before our very eyes
The time has come to move on to more important things
We're proud of you and wish you success in all the future brings

Love Always,
Mom and Dad
Kristopher,

From the moment I first saw you
The second that you were born
I knew that you were the love of my life
Quite simply the love of my life

You can drive me crazy
You can drive me anywhere
Here are the keys
Just do as you please
It may not always be easy

But you’re the love of my life
My heart is riding on a runaway train
You are the love of my life
Through all the pleasure and pain
From the moment I first saw you
I knew it right away
I knew that you were the love of my life
Simply the love of my life

from “Love of My Life” by Carly Simon

I love you always and forever and am proud beyond measure of all your accomplishments.
Congratulations!!!

Nikki,
Here's to you
May your dreams come true
May old father time never be unkind
And through the years save your smiles and your tears
They're just souvenirs
They'll make music in your heart!

Remember this

“And I’ll be back ‘round again
Yes I’ll walk in time with you old friend”
They are the best of friends, they have been so for life,
   It would make their parents happy
      if Emily was Ari’s wife.
They compliment each other in so many ways,
Emily teaches compassion, and Ari teaches
   “You don’t always have to get “A’s””.
They support each other in everything—
   They never miss an event,
Emily sees every show
And to soccer (at least this year) Ari went.
Together they conquered SGA as presidents of the class,
Then Emily tried theatre,
But for soccer-Ari will have to pass.
At bedtime each night you can count on a call,
In London and Israel-these two had a ball.
These four years together have been the best that they could be,
This friendship will last forever
And that’s the story of Ari and Emily!

A FRIEND OF THE HEART

is a friend you can trust, who's always there for you,
Sharing your secrets,
encouraging dreams,
and understanding, too.

A FRIEND OF THE HEART

is a friend for a lifetime,
for whether you're near or apart,
A friend is as close as your happiest memories—
and, always, as close as your heart.

I'm glad to have a friend like you—
A friend who'll always be
So close in heart and thought and soul,
you're always near to me.

"Friends are like fortune cookies, its what's on the inside that counts"
Lauren  Ritu  Jaclyn  Lauren

“A friend is one who knows you as you are, understands where you've been, accepts who you have become, and still gently invites you to grow...”

Jackie, Laur-Laur, Rit, & Tayls,
We've been through so much and shared way too many miles,
It all started looking for a fourth to complete our square,
Then we saved Lauren, from the other side that's where,

Tahitian noni juice was our favorite snack,
Decapitated bunnies were found behind our back,
Taylor went through tissues like Lauren went through boys,
Dennis was always there showing off his new toys,

Bat-mitzvahs were fun, getting done up was a blast,
But we couldn't find Michael - he was busy in the back (psychol)
The disease struck in December, making it a month of hell,
But the Fab 4 survived - just barely made it here to tell,

At school we were together for lunch, gym, & Miss Brahms,
Photos and the crackhouse made for a great Junior Prom,
West Virginia, Delaware, Ohio, Towson, and the shore,
Road trips were a constant theme, the next year would only bring more,

We represented our group at puff Daddy and Smokin' Grooves,
Taylor did her favorite "stomp", showing off her moves,
The summer was filled with "long, hard" days at REC,
Lauren's frequent morning visits kept us all in check,

Senior year schedules brought us together (all day)
You call it a coincidence, we say we're just getting our way,
Nazis galore entered our lives, plaguing both our years,
Love & Kitchen were bearable, but Gym one brought us to tears,

We've had lots of little fights, but true friendship always lasts,
Although next year will keep us states apart, we forever share our past,
People say these are the best years, the ones to always remember,
But the years wouldn't be memorable if we hadn't met our "best friends forever".

It all began in 1994, when we were introduced three times. Somehow those just were not enough to convince us of our inevitable destiny. Finally, freshman year Earth Science, Vocal Workshop, and Gym in 1995 brought us together once more. On the first day of school, we stared at each other from across the room and were sure that the other did not remember us, although we ourselves did. Little did we know that we would become an inseparable pair, who can read each other's minds with a simple glance. We have shared everything from auditions, to plays, to singing, to boyfriends, to BBYO, to phone calls galore, to driving, to NEVER being able to drive each other remotely crazy, to nights at Friendly's (on Valentine's Day too!), to secrets, to rings and things, to stubbornness, to laughter, to hugs, and squeals, and tickles, and even tears. We are soul sisters who share the same thoughts and crazy sense of humor, not to mention our amazing ability to raise our right eyebrows. Of all the things that we treasure the most, our friendship and each other are the most precious of all.
Adam & Lauren

"I love those moments when suddenly there is nothing but you."

Ad- I thought I was lucky when I first met you, but I didn't know what lucky was until I had you as a boyfriend.

Laur- In you I have found a friend, a supporter, and a love. I couldn't ask for anything more. Thanks for being the best girl in the world.

Friend...
You are always there...
Comfort and compassion...
Willing to give... A shoulder to lean on
You are my friend.

Strength you have given me...
Time and time again...
To face the trials in my life...
You are my friend.

A willingness to listen...
To help me when I'm fallen...
Nonjudgmental you've been...
You are my friend.

Time will flow...
And years will pass...
Separate paths we may go...
But my love for you will last...
You are my friend.

Dear Vince,

I can't believe you're leaving
I'll miss everything we've had.
From break dancing at clubs to getting yelled at by dad.

Ever since we were little
we've always been so tight,
Playing G.I. Joes and Transformers and staying up all night.

You taught me all my breaking skills and how to be the "Small Wonder"
Making me battle these girls, and all the pressure you put me under

With all the things you've done for me
You'll always have a place in my heart
Not even the separation of college could ever keep us apart.

THE PEASE SISTERS

Christa,
These years have gone by much too fast
Why did I take for granted the times past?

Sometimes I wonder why my sister has to go,
I need her to guide me through my woe.

Though we seemed to drift apart,
you have always had a place in my heart.

When I have a problem, I will open up your door and wonder why you aren’t there any more.

Although you never knew,
I have always wanted to be some one like you.

You always seem happy through the bad,
a quality which I wish I had.

No one knows me quite like you, sisters like you come in very few.

Christa, I need you more than you know,
Why oh why, do you have to go?

With all my love,
Your sister forever-Katie

USMAN - a true definition of a best friend; he's always been there through thick and thin; whenever I need a shoulder to lean on, he always spared his; always asking me what I wanted to do, even though he wants to do something else; helping me be the best person I can be; I will never forget him cause it is the worst USMAN that means best friend to me.

Chaa Chaa Chaa

FAISAL - a second definition of a best friend; one of the kindest and coolest people I have ever met; even though we have been through a lot of ups and downs since the first day we've met, he has always been there for me; anytime I needed advice or opinion about anything, I would come to him first; even though we come from different parts of the world, faith has brought our friendship together.

Through the years we all changed, and some of us have grown apart. But, everything we have shared has stayed with me and made me who I am today. I love all of you. MAUREEN- you always said people don’t change they modify...I disagree. We all change thousands of times in our life. But, it’s the lucky ones who maintain friendships throughout the good and bad times.

Genna- Our friendship has been so special to me. I know that in the future, I'll think back on all our memories and smile! I love you, forever and always.

Jul,
The past 14 years with you have been great. You have always been there for me when I needed you. I'm not sure whether or not you know this, but you are my true best friend. I've told you things that I haven't told anyone else and we have shared so many memories. Throughout the years we have both cried and laughed together many times. Watching you sing and dance when you were hyper was quite amusing. I'm really going to miss you and your craziness when you go to college, but I wish you the best of luck in the future.

Thanks for being my sister.

Love,
Cathy

“It’s the heart afraid of breaking that never learns to dance.
It’s the dream afraid of waking that never takes the chance.
It’s the one who can’t be taken who cannot seem to live.
And the soul afraid of dying that never learns to live.”

“Some say love it is a river that drowns the tender reed.
Some say love it is a razor that leaves your soul to bleed.
Some say love it is a hunger and endless aching need.
I say love it is a flower and you it’s only seed.”

You’ve certainly come a long way from that precocious toddler to a remarkably talented and giving young man. You possess a maturity far beyond your years. Always remember “to thine own self be true.”

Dearest Jacki,

We have watched you grow from a beautiful little girl to a warm, caring, kind and loving young lady.

We are so proud of all you've accomplished on the soccer and lacrosse fields, but most of all your graduation from Hebrew College and now Cherry Hill East High School.

Your plans to attend either The College of Charleston or The University of South Carolina is a dream come true and we know you will be a dynamite addition to either institution.

We love you and wish you only happiness in all you do.

Love,

Mom, Dad, Nicki & Grandma

JUSTIN AND BETH

Justin - Well babe, this is my last chance to tell you how much you mean to me. The past 3 years have been nothing short of amazing and there are no words to describe how much I will miss seeing your blue eyes every morning. I'll always be your number one fan. Love you always. Champ, Slugger, Shortstuff, Princess, Beth.
P.S. - Don't forget H2O!!

Beth - It has been a great 3 years and now it looks like we're going our separate ways. We've had a lot of great times together and you will always have a place in my heart. Thank you for being such a great friend. Love always, Justin.
P.S. - You're still a punk!

MELISSA,

YOU ARE STILL MY LITTLE GIRL, ALTHOUGH YOU ARE ALL GROWN UP. YOU HAVE GROWN TO BE A BEAUTIFUL PERSON, INSIDE AND OUT.

AS YOU GO FORWARD, ACCEPT THE ADVICE OF THOSE WHO HAVE GONE BEFORE YOU, AND IN THE SAME MANNER REACH BACK TO THOSE WHO WILL FOLLOW YOU.

YOU ARE A SHINING EXAMPLE OF WHAT A DAUGHTER CAN BE. YOU ARE BEAUTIFUL AND GOOD, HONEST AND PRINCIPLED, DETERMINED AND INDEPENDENT, SENSITIVE AND INTELLIGENT. YOU ARE A SHINING EXAMPLE OF WHAT EVERY MOTHER WISHES HER DAUGHTER TO BE.

THIS IS ONE STEP OF ACCOMPLISHMENT. NOW CONTINUE ON TO THE NEXT AND WHEN YOU HAVE FINISHED YOU WILL FIND THAT YOUR LIFE IS COMPLETE. THAT YOU HAVE DONE YOUR BEST TO GET TO THE TOP.

I AM VERY PROUD OF YOU. YOU HAVE MADE ME HAPPY WITH THE CHOICES YOU HAVE MADE THUS FAR. YOU ARE A MATURE AND RESPONSIBLE INDIVIDUAL. KEEP STRIVING TO DO THE BEST YOU CAN. I WILL ALWAYS BE BY YOUR SIDE AND I WILL ALWAYS BE THERE WHEN YOU NEED A HUG.

SET AN EXAMPLE FOR YOUR BROTHER AND HELP HIM TO FOLLOW YOUR LEAD.

KEEP THOSE BIG BROWN EYES OPEN AND THAT SMILE ON YOUR FACE. DON'T LET ANYTHING OR ANYONE BLOCK YOUR WAY TO SUCCESS.

"MY LITTLE PETUNIA"

CONGRATULATIONS!!

Melissa:

As you enter the real world, be guided always by the following words of Lao-Tsu:

Manifest plainness
Embrace simplicity
Reduce selfishness
Have few desires

Your unwavering sensitivity towards the less fortunate members of our society must not be allowed to diminish. It truly defines your personality...a unique character recognized by those whose respect and love you've deservedly earned.

Congratulations!

Jill & Andy

After 10 years of friendship we know each other as well as any two people can. Miss Geach's 8th grade class is when it all began, but talking in the park, in Andy's basement, and at all hours on the phone are the true roots to our friendship. We're thankful for each other in the good and the bad. Although our high school days are coming to an end, the bond being best of friends will never end.
MELUSSA MARRERO,

CONGRATULATIONS, MAY YOU SUCCEED IN ALL YOUR ENDEAVORS.

May your smile and song continue to bring joy to those whose lives you touch. Congratulations!
Love,
Mom, Dad, Laura,

TO OUR SARA-
It has been a pleasure to watch you grow up into such a beautiful young lady. As a daughter and a sister, you have brought so much joy into our lives. We wish you all the happiness in the world! Always follow your dreams!
Love,
Mom, Dad,

Jackie, and Andrea

Little Laura
in your tu-tu
We were all so very proud of you
Since then many years have gone by Now it's time to open your wings and fly
As to your high school days you say goodbye
Go for it Laura and reach for the sky!

We Love You,
Laura!
Love,
Mama Pajama,
Doodad, Kim, Dave,
Mady, and Pooh

To Our Darling Sarah - It's so hard to believe you're all grown up and leaving home. What will we do without seven girls on the couch watching 90210, or Buffy? The silence without the telephone ringing constantly will be surreal. The sound of the hairdryer will be sorely missed. And where will I be without my fashion consultant? You have grown into a delightful young lady, full of life and love, despite the fact that mom occasionally forgot to pick you and your brother up and you were left sitting on a curb, and dinner invariably came from Lambert's. Our lives will be certainly quieter without you at home - no soccer, no lacrosse, no 'walk the dog,' no 'have you done your homework?' no what are you doing tonight and when will you be home? You will succeed in whatever you choose in life. Thank you for being you, Sweetie. We love you....mom and dad.

Normally, hall of fame consists of people. But, as anybody who has ever come into the yearbook office knows, we're anything but normal. We proudly present the first inmate (with one exception) hall of fame known to mankind. What else can you expect when you stick half a dozen of any of these crazy teenagers into a cramped room? Add Mr. Carr and you have yourself a snafu waiting to happen. The story of our yearbook experience this year encompasses more than any page could ever relate, so we came up with nine things that we will always hold dear to our hearts. Shuttle Tiberian: We admit it. We have no lives. We look for cool clip art in our spare time. But you have to agree. It is very cool. Clock that doesn't work despite numerous battery changes. It makes our day when an unsuspecting victim walks in, takes a look at the clock, and freaks out. Rod of Wisdom/Thinking Staff and Mirror: The versatile red pole that we use for all kinds of unmentionable activities, including fixing the clock that doesn't work. The mirror behind it is used daily to check collar/call her up status. CD Player: It looks so innocent, but underneath that cool plastic exterior lies the cause of many near-deaths. It's also been the source of good times, i.e. Mr. Carr leaves the room and wild dancing and jumping around the room ensues. Mr. Carr Bear: You've got the hemp hat with the Christmas balls, the glasses, and the wrestling belt. Nothing more needs to be said. Riki and Vicki: Christened after our community editors, these bears... wait. No explanation needed for this one either. Just look at them. The Closet: Only certain people know how to open it - which is very useful when you close it by accident and become susceptible to the wrath of a certain yearbook advisor. Popcorn/Roisin/Minnie/Small: No one quite knows where they came from and what they're doing on Mr. Carr's desk, but they help to pass the time when there's nothing to do. The snail, made from psychology brain dough, is this year's contribution to the eclectic group. Mr. Yellen: Last, but certainly not least, he's "yearbook guy," the name all East students know him by. The yearbook staff would like to officially give a big "THANK YOU" for everything he has done for us. And there you have it. Hope you enjoyed the book. We had fun making it.
