introduction
dedication
Mr. Casto, we dedicate to you a printed memory of four full, growing years. The year we entered stumbling, inexperienced, a fragmented idea of a unified class, and the year we planted ourselves in the depths of E-wing, a little stronger, a little more confident and alive. We give to you upon these pages our first prom, the heartaches, the hectic activity, and most of all, the joy, of our junior year. And finally, Mr. Casto, we give to you our year of parting. We thank you for your time and energy and leadership. We hope that on these pages we will live and smile for you...goodbye.
We live in an age of myth and illusion. In RAMPANT 1975, each section is introduced by the artwork of illusions to reflect a world in which even long accepted truths are suspect. However, behind the illusions, the focus of this yearbook is on the development of the student. West is like a studio in which teachers are artists, wielding time's brush upon the faces of each class. Activities and sports add color to underclassmen who enter West yet undetailed in character, mind and physical form. Each portrait develops individually until to seniors are added the final strokes; at last, we face ourselves and leave the frame of West behind: a yearbook memory, a senior portrait framed upon a wall. Development becomes a reality when we can transcend the frame and see behind the illusions.

Asst. Superintendent Robert Salati

Superintendent Dr. Robert Holl

Four years ago, when you were only a few years out of your childhood, you enrolled at Cherry Hill High School West. In the intervening years to the present you engaged in planned learning activities directed toward preparing you to live with some measure of success through the end of this century and into the twenty-first century.

Among other things it was the mission of the school to transmit to you and to your generation the best ideals of our culture in the hope that you would find a destiny of self-realization, freedom, and peace. Only time will reveal whether the mission succeeded. It encountered a major obstacle. Some identified the obstacle as a generation gap. Others called it a cultural gap. Nearly all agreed that the gap was wider and deeper than the usual gap of past generations.

All past generations found a need for continuity of the culture. Somehow they bridged the gap. They crossed the bridge to their own destinies, but their point of departure was from their present which was connected to their past. So, too, will you find the destiny for your generation. You will be unable to wholly reject the present and the past. Surely, you will possess some of it and carry it with you into your changed world.

The nature of your cultural destiny is presently unknown. It is not uncommon to fear the unknown. On the other hand, there are good reasons for hope. Our hope is rooted in our faith in you, and in past ideals. We know that you desire freedom, oppose war and violence, yearn for peace and understanding among all peoples, and have compassion for the helpless. These are ancient ideals.

We are hopeful that you will find your way to a better world for you and your children. In your journey you will carry your ideals to sustain you. Perhaps to your ideals you would add the words of the ancient prophet who said that what is required of mankind is "to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly."

It is our hope that, in some small measure at least, the learnings and ideals accrued from your years with us will help you in your search for your better world.

We will remember pleasantly our joy in working together with you. In our careers you have been our reason for being.

Good luck!
Good-bye.

secretaries

The secretary's job is a lot of tap-tap-tippity-tap-tap and scratching seemingly senseless squiggles on sheets of paper and dealing with a lot of ding-a-ling's for bosses that can't be bothered and blasting broadcasts and oh, so many delightful duties. And when a secretary takes a break, how bountiful becomes the bubbling babble as she cheerfully chatters with her amiable associates. Spirited singing, lilting laughter and a buzzing bustle are always around, for the office is a lively place with sounds of secretaries streaming through.

The bell rings, and hoards of chattering students barge into the library, most escapees from some humdrum class or study hall, and every one anticipating group oral discussion, scholastic or otherwise. This mass of human bodies throws books down onto tables and settles, groaning, into library chairs. Then swiftly tip-toeing ladies scuttle about, shushing and shuffling and evicting passless people, and soon all is calm and order. The librarian has a talent for tidiness and peace.
I feel flat amazed

the labyrinth of West whose webwork
tangles
and entraps me
purple paths perplex
the bells awaken me to oblique courses
corridor of exits exists close but closed
each path a horizontal plane to vertigo
then vertically to college or to yet another circle of confusion

how to pass?
or else to bypass
mazy mesh of classes
compass
learn the ropes
of knotted halls
with knots of students seeking all encompassing directions
from the complex office walls hang silken crystal catalogues well-woven
so inviting to the unsuspecting
"Fly!" they say
"above the ravel"
but I’m still lost
in sticky lace
of high school with a future
to unravel
from life’s maze

which is why we need help from guidance counselors crystal volumes
terrified me
characters reflected truths
about each other and
and anyway i had to choose a character myself
to study:
who could help?

one another and
and anyway i had to choose
no one could help me till i grasped
the looking glass
of literature
which lives
In the beginning, Man created the word, for Man's thoughts were without form, and his soul lay plunged in darkness. Words became the light of the lips of Men, whereby all minds might be seen.

And Man's creations grew and multiplied and lo! he saw the need for sentences in which to contain them. And Man called these things together language. And the heart of Man rejoiced. And Man said, Let these sentences come together to express an idea, that each may warm his soul by the wisdom of another; and it was so. Then Man's heart became filled with fresh ideas and swelled, yea, trembled with desire to impart them to others, and he learned to communicate passions which made his words burn still brighter than before.

And that his wisdom might not be extinguished, Man created the written word. And Man said, Behold, language and ideas shall mate and melt together in their passion, and forth shall come all manner of beauty and eloquence: and it was so. And Man called this, his creation, literature.

And Man saw that his works were good and mighty upon the earth. And he rejoiced that Man could now give of himself to others and fear no longer the darkness of ignorance. And his heart was filled, and blazed with the fire of the knowledge of the creator's mind.
Lo! praise the prowess of pedant kings
Of champion chatters, chalk-armed thanes,
Of English instructors, erudite all;
Whose pithy pupils, pert and persistent,
Like whale-path wanderers, wizened in schools,
Fire fury forensic, questions fast fashioned
To drive mentors daffy, deranged and distraught.
Far follows the fame, not falsely achieved
Of pedagogues passing on theme paper pyre
To mentors' mad mead-house, that mansion unworldly
Where Wyrd verse unveil'd vents visions of Grendel,
Of ancient Dane dean, who warned dangers deep
In kindness to kinsmen, (a kenning for students).
To wights "Be a wolf," warned wandering master,
"Or forfeit favored order to fell student fancy."
But pedant prince practice, praise-worthy learn-path,
Allows scholar scoffing, though scorching and scalding.
Not scylding nor sheathing with shifty evasion
Pedantic pet pointers from pupil parle blunting.
So kinsmen's minds mingle, make in mature manner
Growth in grey matter, in grasping inside.
As West student Fates fare Fortunes of faculty,
Kindest to kinsmen, keenest for fame.

In early times the thunder rolled
And man fell down and worshipped it.
His world with mysteries was filled,
So to explain them man made myth.

All nature had its magic cause
But what it was, man could not tell.
His only powers were humble pleas—
His fate controlled by nature's will.

Then greater grew man's heart and mind,
Content no longer to be ruled,
For he'd observed some certain trend
In which were nature's courses styled.

Within these trends man found the laws
That govern change upon the earth.
What once was magic in his eyes
Of some great scheme became a part.

Now man is master of the power
That caused the skies to split asunder,
And lesser lives before him cower—
He is creator of the thunder.

Only once in a blue moon do I correctly translate English idioms, because I’d rather feign a frog in my throat than be a hotdog in class. Foreign languages are just not my cup of tea. My teacher is cock-sure that I have a screw loose, which rubs me the wrong way; so, I often hit the sack in that class.

Une seule fois dans une lune bleue fais-je correctement traduire les idiomes d’Anglaise, parce que je feindrais une grenouille dans ma gorge plutôt que d’être un chien-chaud à la classe. Français juste-ment n’est pas ma tasse de thé. Ma professeurs est coq-sûr que j’ai une vis détachée, qui me frotte au moyen faux; alors, souvent je frappe à la sac en cette classe-là.

Solamente una vez en una luna azul puedo traducir correctamente los frases en las idiomas ingleses, porque me gustaría mas simular que tengo una rana en mi garganta que estar un perro caliente en la classe. Es verdad que las lenguas extranjeras no son mi taza de te. Mi professor es gallo-cierto que yo tengo un tornielo suelto que y ese estrigome el modo malo; así muchas veces golpeo el saco en esa classe.

Were I a blind man, and saw not,
Viewed not the color of the day, nor the light,
Were I sightless—ne’er beheld this form of mine,
Nor pools of anguish welling in another’s eyes,
Nor joy swift splashing ’cross his lips,
Nor yet the sight of welcome arms to harbor my heaving spirit—
Were I a blind man, I’d need but listen
To sense the passing of shadow as waking chords flow forth,
To know consuming passion within another’s breast flow forth.
Through twisted wrecks of melody crash’d upon my ear.
I would perceive sweet, rapturous hearts
In song which sails so gently by,
E’en feel soft waves of harmony that drench my weary head.
Were I a blind man, lacking sight,
Still might I be whole.
For ears would act as eyes
And experience the world—
Through music.
The business of America is business, which means money if you manage it and debt if you don’t. So if you still think bookkeeping is done by librarians, and if you still have to detail an animal before you retail it, then I think you could profit from some business courses. By taking some such studies you would learn that typing with a pica-type machine is not elite, and shorthand is not really a deformity of the arm. You would also discover that distributive education is distributed quite well by those vaunted vendors of the business department who are reading this yearbook over your shoulder and having a depression.

I experience a wild intoxication each day in gym class that causes me to stagger about drunkenly for forty-two minutes, oblivious to the passage of time. A lush feeling results from exchanging heavy garments and clumsy shoes for a light uniform and springy sneakers. I am left reeling from physical exertion, perhaps from frenzied activity at parallel bars. Then I stop to refresh myself, drinking in gulps of vintage air from the gym or locker room. The fresh smell of Right Guard makes me tipsy as it fills my nose and eyes. At the end of the period, when this strange inebriation has reached its height, I totter to the nearest sink to splash cold water on my face and try to sober up for my next class.

To savor winter sunrise hikers stormed
The mountain fortress sun for secrets formed
Of forest ramparts, pathways lost in snow,
Of frozen breath and screeching winds which blow
Through trees bare but for icy crystal glaze.
One army dared to brave cruel winter ways;
With warmth of heart enduring gusty cold,
Foregoing cozy quilts for blankets rolled
In tents together (sleeping bags locked tight By club advisors fearful of what might...)
They shared their fire and food and fuel and fun,
And shared the sight of night's flight from the sun,
Which rose in blush of ruby o'er the camp
Of mountaineers whose light was nature's lamp.

this torch still burns.
The Golden Age of Rome contained more than just a succession of togas and banquets and orgies and blankets with SPQR stamped in color gold to match the sunlight glistening from chariot hubcaps rolling slowly from Junior's Classical Carwash on the Appian Way. There were also artifacts to fill a phalanx of museums and culture to command a legion of dedicated students in quest of college bowls and other higher pursuits of the mind. There was a great supply of Roman candy—or perhaps leftover from the Greeks—whose remnants can still be found circulating each September for fifty cents per bar. There were also aqueducts and viaducts and mallarducts and sandals fixed with Roman arches and attachments for roller skating parties in the Coliseum. Nowadays, the Golden Age of JCL also contains more than just a succession of togas and banquets and . . .

I see the world through artist's eyes.

All of physical things are sculpture, colored collages of design and shape. All the spirit is, to me, a painting sketched across the air, an abstract organization of impression and thought. And all the world of art is but the world of living in a stiller form—it is just as real, it laughs and cries, it lives. I see all life as art, and art as life through these, my artist's eyes.

Opinions expressed are offered by the writer or student editorial board and do not necessarily reflect the positions of the School Administration or its employees.
LIONS ROAR was found last night lying senseless in the Publications Room, the victim of an apparent hold-up. West's Principal denied rumors of gang violence in connection with the attack. Advisor Ms. Donna Altopiedi agreed, commenting, "We're usually held up by photography."

Police reportedly found lying close to ROAR a switchblade, two darkroom keys, a bent pica ruler, a blue pencil and a lion cropped to death. The knife was allegedly used to cut corners near deadlines.

Sports Editor Maryann Bastnagel remarked, "Who cares?!" She added, "We had a great time and learned a lot about truth in journalism. Would you believe most of us used to favor the First Amendment?" News Editor Ted Greenberg responded, "I'm going to Florida."

Editor-in-chief Mark Cohen, whose little red Daily News style sheet revolutionized the paper, discounted the reports of an assault on LIONS ROAR. He observed, "We're always senseless near dead lions."

ASPECTS is not really a meat-grinder which chops up student creativity with the blade of a high school grammar book. It is just a band of students making music through discussion of and printing of West’s art and verse. They might fall flat on notes of diction, usage, spelling, punctuation and other old-fashioned elements of language, but don’t begrudge them nostalgia. And if their tone at times sounds perversely sharp because they point to works by Freud to fathom poems about pencils, trees and baseball bats, so what? They only follow the text, and ASPECTS wouldn’t feel itself without roughing up a few textural references.

One day a group of artists gazed Upon an empty, waiting stage,
And filled that canvas in their minds
With brightly painted Gypsy scenes.
Then people came to fill the void,
And acting as the artist’s brush,
They sketched rough lines upon the stage—
A portrait scrawled in black and white.
To give dimension to this draft,
The craftsmen added varied lights;
Their shadows softened jagged strokes
And, softly, there bloomed Gypsy Rose.
With central figures fairly sketched
And shaped by shadows, light, and dark,
The drama needed scenery
To fill the set with life-like forms.
So, painted structures soon appeared,
A backdrop for the pictured play;
The scene began to look as if It mirrored true reality.
One final touch was needed then
To make the vision all complete:
The actors, drawn in black and grey,
Were dressed in colors new and bright.
The final strokes at last were done,
The scene came brilliantly to life;
It laughed and wept in every line,
And Gypsy filled the stage with light.

Secretary of Education Keith Ross when i saw the stud. government baby-sitting service and then their rent-a-kid idea i became very excited because i had always been rather suspicious about what goes on down there in the bottom of f-wing when the door is shut—you know giving everybody the "times" and planning probing polls and thrilling bike hikes and all and now those two new programs all together s.g. started looking better—maybe we could rent kids cheaper if we buy activity cards—i already knew that stud. gov. gave me elections and charities and bulletin boards and college conferences and stuff like that but i never bothered to sign up (i voted once) they surely worked real hard to get a juke box and old "lion again" and a cleaner school and all but now at last a program right for me—it's about time really i was thinking i might vote the next election (well i would if i were staying) and i'd throw the rascals out for raising taxes (didn't they?) well anyway they let a sophomore in the cabinet disturbing our chain of being—what west is coming to i don't know but s.g. will be out in front for sure battle of the bands square

farmers all were we and country hics in overalls and checkered shirts with husks of corn strewn all about and straws of hay and new york city boys acquired a hayseed accent and girls from philly called themselves by names like mary-jo and cathy-sue and everything was countri-fied even the cafeteria and i hope they round up another square dance soon 'cause I caught hay fever at the last one and that's nothing to sneeze at.

whose light yet travels to us though the sources no more burn;
unreal unwinding

and feel the warmth excitement pleasure fire
of a super hop
but then the winding up;
somewhere deejay director
takes his records home;
our memories of rite remain.

sports
One raw October day a school of scarlet jackets trudged towards home in gloom, dejected. But all of the purple jackets, purple streamers, purplepower buttons, lions and their fans went wild, ecstatic, crazed with joy. Their voiceless throats were screaming, and their long-stilled horns were blaring that sweet tune in mad exhilaration and revenge, perhaps. The town awoke and wondered who it was that crimson-stained that battlefield of ten-yard trenches. Why were those purple shakers window waving out in glee at saddened spots of crimson color eastward trekking on the beaten path to home? West football: 11-7.

harder! harder
fight
to find and focus fabled purple passions spirit faded
bleached in bleached crowd

where are our yells kicks screams and songs for pride of lions like line of lilac leaders with the shakers
frozen thighs and livid lips?

on hands sit fans
in warmth but cold
cheer planters pant
to raise our roots
the alma mater
thumbs stem upward
kick off oooooooohhh!
soiled stands tremble
run back
go! go! block ’em! break it!
touchdown
violent violet quivering crowd
in frenzied flower of emotion . . .
drat, we missed the point

but what’s the point?
lions’ pride leads rooters on to score some more applause
and pride
our spirits spill
over through after the game

the eye follows enemy team marks each opening plots a course between and legs burst forth running toward the goal cradling the ball between them and a mighty kick
met in mid-air
by a tousled head
aching to send it skyward then goalward at last where arms and hands
and feet in a flurry
send it flying outward again to be captured by feet legs eyes and heads the body is a team
and the team is a body

I'll be hanged
if I can figure out how gymnasts swing
all parallel
from bar to bar,
maintaining their sobriety
and sense of equilibrium;
or how they ride the horse
without a saddle,
scissors-lashing air
with whiteblade legs
and faces showing strain
of every tight-stretched sinew;
whew! or else
the way they wing
from ring to ring
like eagles arms-spread,
till they hang suspended with their pointed toes like missiles sleek and swift but halted in their flight by hidden forces of an unknown
gravity.

West's gymnasts are the best because they have the hang of it.

I see a flower budding from a balance beam, arising and unfolding petal arms and legs; until on one thin stem she flutters, reaches for the grace of sun and judges. How odd it seems that gymnasts blossoming must raise their roots of mats, uneven beams and pommelless horses heavy in the afternoon to cafeteria practice soil. With all the boys who buzz like bees and volunteer for spotting duty, wouldn't you expect for garland of West gymnasts life would be more rosy?

It is. From every blooming meet they leave with victors' laurels.

She looks at you through bleary, reddened eyes
That no amount of make-up can repair;
She'll not respond to sympathetic sighs,
In some odd way, she doesn't seem to care.
And all her golden curls hang stringing down
About her shoulders, dripping cold and wet.
For all that's worth, she could be diamond crowned
With hair in latest fashion styled and set.
You'd think she'd cry with chlorine-redened eyes,
Complain her hair gets wrecked five days a week.
You'd think she'd catch pneumonia, almost die
From swimming in the wintertime so bleak.
Instead her smile is radiant as the sun
As (croaking slightly), out she cries, "We Won!"

"Captain"

"Hey, Coach."

Ten pins to win the match: to spare is wise,
But polished alley dares you to reveal
Your thunder. Risk the gutter for one strike
At glory and at frame of mocking pins.
You feel all eyes, feel power as you mount
The lane alone. Slight swaggering you stride And heave smooth three-holed earth in lightning orb
Down wooden universe towards pocket hit.
First glow like Titan, then turn eyes away
From split of ten and seven standing wide.
You feel the pressure, feel the laughing pins
Whose mirth makes only sound in alley tense.
Then cradle your pet ball and with a slow,
Relaxed approach release with lazy spin
Your rubber animal; you pray to win.
The ten pin falls across to seven graze;
Your teammates cheer; you sigh, a champion.

I heard the sound of sneakered feet
Come pounding down the empty hall,
And soon a band of runners fleet
Came dashing round a corner wall.

I stood, amazed, as they ran by
In white gym shorts and tennis shoes;
A group of champions, to my eye—
Competitors would surely lose.

But I was shocked as they ran past,
And staring at them, round I whirled;
I know now why they run so fast—
The Indoor Track Team runs with girls.

One strike, two on, two out, the seventh: Lions down a pair of runs. You tap your bat nervously on the wavering plate. Why are the fences moving back? You feel as if the entire game is blanketed by haze; only you and the pitcher glow like animated characters on the electric scoreboard. Another curve/slider-screwknuckle... Geez, it takes so long to say, I don't even get a chance to swing! "Bat off your shoulders! Wake up out there!" You hear the words faintly. Pitch, swing, whack! A hit! You dash for first—Where is it?—dig for second with every ounce of muscle—That fielder's got a great arm—hear a distant cheering as you streak for third—The throw! Is the coach saying slide?—you plow into third, kicking up a cloud of red dust which settling seems to bury the fog. Was I safe? "Get up and walk to home, you hotdog. Who slides to third on a home run?" A home run? Oh rats!
track

You expect to follow a track and field meet? Impossible! You'll never get on track with the relays and dashes. Keeping up with the high jumps is a low probability. The broad jumpers will leap before you look, and you surely won't catch the pole vault unlocked. While you pace about from event to event, the shot will be put and the put will be shot, and you'll miss the three birds being javelin speared. And follow the discus? Discussion is futile. Undoubtedly you will despair from the confusion, but take heart. Even as you lose track of the field, West will win track and pace the field. Lions beat them cold in every heat.

softball

Their hurler's underhanded toss
Had terrorized our team.
The scoreboard threatened shutout loss,
But Sadar had a scheme.
Our better batters borrowed jewels
Which sparkled in the sun.
Their pitcher screamed, "Against the rules!"
But knew that West had won.
Near blinded by reflected light,
That pitcher lost her stuff.
Our hot bats hit balls out of sight;
We grinned, "She's not so tough."
Well-schooled in catching, throwing, all Game skills from start to end,
West's slugging stars still know softball Diamonds are girls' best friend.

golf

I always thought of golfers as doctors on Wednesdays a club of people putting about and watching for eagles birdies tee for two and driving caddies everything the fair way carrying an extra iron to smooth the creases in their checkered pants. But when I scored a sixty-eight (and only on the first nine holes) and saw the skill and felt the sweat the ache par for the course I nearly had a stroke but mostly hooked. West's team is hooked on winning.

you first appear in the studio
a rough sketch
an outline
penciled black upon white paper shadowed
but without the wealth of colors
which time's brush will bring stark undetailed
although in some uneven ways in sports or music math or art already undercoat is prime yet incomplete you are unsure the features which will mark
your senior portrait
come three years
come quickly
tempera clubs and classes
bold intemperate amourous oils ever still lives in water colors streaked with tones of waxing friendships
three full years
of writing papers
working papers
records eyeing buying breaking floats and rallies
ID cards to lose
and poker games to win
to pass away slow study halls
three years
for different daubs of paint to form the lines and shapes uniquely detail different picture faces like your own
three years
will come and smear you stroke you brush you leave you brushed aside at times
at time you'll swear paint faster knowing not how fast
three years
your canvas dries.

The glow of burning art inside
Casts light which cannot be denied
By those of us whose visions ride
Each golden ember rising high.
We blaze of plays, of song inspired,
Of paints and words and sculpture fired
In spirit's kiln which ne'er expired
Flares sparkle in our ardent eyes.
As PAVAS members, flaming heights
Are reached when friendship's fuel ignites
Our spirits, talents, selves. Our lights Burn brighter, and we sight the sky.

once i was a lowly freshman, looking for a part to play, trying to develop a character which would gain me recognition in a production that encompassed a cast of hundreds. alas, i was doomed to labor behind the scenes, feeling slightly inferior, but drinking in from afar all of the glamour, studying the actions of the principals and leaders of the company. i knew that one day i would fill the space that they must vacate.

indeed, it was not long before i gained a position of a little more respect and sophistication in my second year with the company. i had a brief line to recite, a mark of individuality and personality that even senior members of the production could identify with me alone. and then, at once, with the influx of a mass of new players, i found myself in the position of being one of the more experienced members of the group. with my rise in stature, however, came the responsibility of directing the less knowledgeable, and my work load became incredibly heavy. so many parts to play—a leader and yet a follower, a leader and still in several ways the unrecognized backstage worker. but i survived this final instruction, never fltering with my many lines and never missing a cue. at last the final reward has come and i stand before an admiring audience with few responsibilities save to entertain. joy and pride fill me, for i have reached the height—i am myself a senior member, a principal, a lead, senior, take a bow; you have performed well and earned your applause, gather your laurels close, friend, for soon you will move to another theater to play a new, more difficult, and even more rewarding role.

each class to pass the time i rake my brain,
my final year i sense a tension lost.
at my cold barren soil the teachers strain,
but seeds of education bite the frost.
no more to yield but now to have my way,
a heavy harvest of escape and fear,
i plant myself and then erode away in stolen moments, rainswept empty year.
leave my studies, no more to be plowed, in hopes of learning courses nowhere taught.
 alas, before my master i lie cowed, within an arrow's reach of that i've sought.
the growth of education must take root;
oh, that with warmth of spring it would bear fruit!

the halls are empty, and i am alone with only memories that echo from the walls and lengthen their shadows before me. how bitter to taste the sweetness of the past when it is gone forever! the cold vastness of space enters my being and i am filled with fearful awe, for my future stretches out before me in grey ribbons of unformed life and mists of uncertain dreams. i cower before the challenge of those mists, a child in need of a haven. let me stay! i beg the unknown powers that propel me forward, but i know that those powers reside within me, that i yearn for what i fear, and a tear born of inner conflict drops swiftly to the ground. farewell, dear friends, dear past, i bid farewell. the nebulous future beckons me forward to find in it new joys, new loves, new memories and so, at last, farewell.
for some of us, senior year meant choosing a college. the first step was easy. personalized, romanticized, computerized invitations bid us attend the colleges of their choice at no cost at all save for tuition, room, board, books, transportation, fees, and laundry. inside all of the envelopes were strangely misdirected letters addressed to “dear student.” many schools enclosed multi-colored brochures which read like richard nixon campaign literature superimposed on a puerto rico travel folder, their bsartistry equal to that in our finest senior papers. but we read it all, impressed, depressed, attracted so we contacted a college or two. then catalogues came, too. after fainting, we came to-and applied ourselves to our applications.

311377 was not our lucky number. In Saturday morning frustration, we cursed those rows of open dots which only number two pencils can transform into mysterious measurements of how well we should do in college as computer programs. Still crusty-eyed from lack of sleep, we checked all of the above or none or one or two; or else, we scribbled on our answer sheets to short-circuit the big machine, in hopes of scoring 1600 or more. Then we waited anxiously for Fate's return. We watched the mail, we hoped, we prayed, we opened envelopes and read our scores, we took the test again. As underclassmen we had looked forward to the College Boards with slightly masochistic anticipation. However, when 311377 was at last gone from our senior lives, our initial desires were more than SATisfied.

I sat down at my desk, full of determination, and hunched behind a fortress of references and materials: Webster's dictionary, Roget's thesaurus, someone's Guide to Grammar, and my sister's typewriter. I took my pen in hand, set my tongue between my teeth, and began to write up my first draft, referring frequently to a few pages of scribbled notes and a stack of pamphlets and handbooks a foot high. Tediously the task wore on, and I began to tire, but still I persevered. Finally, in the wee hours of the morning, my hair all bent from being clutched for hours in my sweaty hand and my desk a litter of papers and mauled books, I began to type. A sleepy head peered in around the door and my mother inquired peevishly, "Is this another English paper?". And I said, "Heck no, Mom, this is just my college application." And boy, is it a beaut.
‘Tis cold midwinter, and my thoughts are bleak
As this sad season’s skies could ever be;
My former pleasures I no longer seek,
Their joys are stale, they coax no smiles from me.
The fruits of labor wither, seem to die,
Their worth as slight as trees’ brown foliage.
So, idle though I know my tasks, I lie,
While winter’s storms about my window rage.
I do not know the cause of this strange sloth,
But surely tis a season of my life
That comes as sure as winter does to earth,
Each cuts off warmth of life with cold, cruel knife.
Still, just as ice must melt in spring’s warm light,
I know this dreary season must take flight.
April is cold this year.
In denouement of senior term
We see ahead the curtain call
Of cap and gown,
The parties cast for friends
We've never really known Except on center stage.
The paint upon our faces falters,
Smears,
Then quickly freezes to our cheeks.
In haste we seek to meet again
Our friends,
To have assurances of friendship
Encore
After final act.
Departing is the hardest part;
We fear
Lest high school players all
Be lost in summer snows.

All of my educational life I have been a "Z". For twelve long years I have sat in the back of the room, unable to see the board, unable to hear the teacher. Do you know what it is like always to be last? In the homeroom assignments, on the honor roll, on the cutting list, I have been last. When the nurse checked our eyesight, I was the last. In this yearbook I am the last! I have forever felt ignored, forgotten, without value, as if (sob) the alphabet ends at "X" or at "W". But being a "Z" does have one advantage, especially during senior year. When sitting in the back of a class, it is very easy to "z-out" undisturbed. Zzzzzzzzz.
We are looking back down the progression of four fine years to that first time, when we were called the freshman class. Our hearts are full of longing and laughter, and we smile sheepishly, and cry happily, "Oh my gosh, it couldn't be!" But we know that the extremely young-looking, small people bumbling about on the page are indeed our very selves, making valiant attempts to establish a class called seven-five. We bounded with the energy of a young cub, eager and alive, and everyone patted us on the head affectionately when we tried to roar, but only achieved a resounding squeak. There we are selling our wares of pretzels and magazines... and there again, wriggling about in an ecstasy of panic over a large toppling structure which didn't really seem to have "the right mixture for success." But no matter; we cut joyful capers around our fearless leaders Marateo and Haubrich, and barked in our small, frosh voice that, sure, we weren't perfect, but no matter how you looked at it, '75 was "alive!"
In Junior year, we reared up to our full height, and never came down again. We did a booming business selling concessions, and at the same time locked up the float competition. And, in spite of being snarled up in one of our toughest academic years, we went on a rampage of activities: the annual ice-skating trip, carwashes, canoeing, and two ski trips (one of which put Fearless Berkowitz on crutches—no matter—her new Lt., Smolenski, can handle things). We regally chose our mates for the prom soon after "Little Us" produced a musical comedy. Across the field of Junior year, the triumph of the '75 Lion ran rampant.
And now we stalk the jungle of Senior year, reigning from a room where the couch is throne. We travel to Vermont for snow, and Florida for sun, and McDonald's for lunch. We stretch, and purr, and attend our prom with majestic splendor. Berkowitz and Smo lenski continued to lead us fearlessly and wisely. But the '75 Lion's mane is curling grey about his dimming eyes, and his once wild roar is somewhat tamer. We look with pride at four full years once more before they fade to memory's realm, where the Lion will ever reign... for now, '75 must sleep.
